

Sea Paintings At Art Gallery

Paintings of the South Pacific by Daniel England will adorn the walls of the Little Art Gallery from October 30 to November 16. David McCosh, assistant professor of drawing and painting at the art school, after viewing the pictures, asked England, an art major and graduate of the University, to exhibit his work.

The young artist, who has been serving with the navy on a submarine tender, made most of his own art materials from supplies sent to him. For him, the South Pacific held beauty in the waves washing up on the beaches and the palms waving on the tropical islands. Even the endless stretches of ocean and the treacherous coral reefs led him to seek his paints. All of these Pacific scenes and many others are recorded in his paintings.

The exhibit, consisting of about 17 pictures, done in oil crayons, will be open to the public from 9:30 to 4:30, Monday through Friday.

In the afternoon a meeting was held by the Newspaper Advertising Service, an organization prepared to sell and service advertisements to all weekly and small-town daily papers in the country. These country meetings are held each year, usually in a series so that those who wish can attend all of these meetings if they are interested.

fruit. Every freshman must know by this time that our mock code of strict regulations receives lip service only, while still freeing the individual from his own conscience.

Make students feel more responsible for their own conduct, and I have faith that they will give a favorable showing. Instead of deliberately postponing the time when they will have to be mature and capable of handling their own lives, and keeping them on a dependent basis, why doesn't our administration try a more positive approach? There are always individuals whose conduct will not be socially acceptable, no matter what the rules, and more rules haven't helped—let's try a little

NATIONAL OR CITIZEN

The Nationality act of 1940 defines a national as a citizen of the United States or a person who, though not a citizen, owes permanent allegiance to the United States, such as the people who reside on Guam or in the Philippines, or other United States dependencies. These people are citizens of their respective islands, but they are United States nationals, not United States citizens. Congressional acts, on the other hand, raised the status of inhabitants of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to that of citizens of the United States.
