NEW TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT

One of many giant presses which apply lead sheathing to telephone cable.

SINCE the war ended, thousands upon thousands of new telephones have been produced and installed.

Hundreds of miles of telephone cable have rolled out of Western Electric plants to provide more circuits for you.

Central office switchboards and other equipment are being manufactured with all possible speed.

Much of this equipment is extremely complex—not only to make but also to fit into the Bell System network. Naturally shortages caused by four years of war cannot be made up for overnight.

Supplying materials and equipment for the Bell System's $2,000,000,000 construction program promises record peacetime volume and a level of employment at Western Electric higher than in the years immediately preceding the war.
