By DALE TYLER

Varsity gridsters were aided greatly during the past season by pigskin handlers from sunny California. One of these is freshman Steve Mazzera from Petaluma, California, some thirty-five odd miles from San Francisco.

Returning from active duty in the Army, veteran Steve, preferably "Muzz," turned his sights on the University of Oregon and is majoring in physical education with coaching plans for a life-time occupation.

Knee Pants Start

Muzz started his athletic career while in knee pants and later proved to be one of the leading athletes in Petaluma high school, earning a total of thirteen varsity letters, in football, basketball, and rack.

Steve held down the right guard position on Tex Oliver's gridiron varsity and his 190 pounds of keen-eyed pigskin flesh proved a definite menace to opposing teams.

Although Muzz would like to play on the Casaba squad, now that the football curtain is down he has decided to turn his whole-hearted effort to his academic courses. When spring term rolls around, he plans on donning the Webfoot woollens for Coach Hobson's hardball hitters.

All-Year Athlete

An all-year athlete, Steve spends his time during the summer months playing for an independent baseball team and also earning good money at that. Although Muzz has played with many gridiron teams, he states, "Oregon has more talent and possibilities for a top team rating than any I have ever played on. We have had some bad breaks that might have caused us to lose the game, but for all the bad breaks, we have had good breaks that helped us win others."

With a hopeful outlook for next season Steve seems quite confident that the Ducks will have a better chance, with the help of the returning veterans.

Likes All

Muzz finds it hard to get back on the old hard road of studying, started the term with only 12 hours of subjects, but remarks, "The kids here are really swell and they sure help a lot when it comes to giving me that badly needed boost when I get down and out." As for the weather up here, Steve doesn't mind it so much and had very little trouble getting accustomed to it, in spite of the fact that he has spent his entire life in California. Dancing is Muzz's favorite hobby, with sports following a close second.

Along with these holiday greetings is our little message of thanks to our kind friends.
