Hamilton, Wilkins Spark Ducks In Torrid Struggle

By FRED BECKWITH

Oregon's basketball artists painted a spectacular masterpiece last night when they defeated the Washington Huskies, 57-56 before 5,000 patrons of the casaba art. The contest, the third in the series between the Ducks and Huskies, held all the proportions of a walkaway in its opening stages. Captain Bob Hamilton touched off a scoring conflagration when he connected with a set shot from some thirty feet out only twenty seconds after the affair had started. Durable Dick Wilkins, whose 20 points enabled him to capture the high point scoring honors for the evening, added a set shot from twenty feet out after Hamilton's opener, and the onslaught began.

It was Oregon 12 and Washington 2, six minutes into the game. So effective was the Hobsonmen's offensive and defensive tactics that the Seattle scrappers were forced to take five timeouts in the first half.

Huskies Challenge

With ten minutes remaining in the game, the nature of the contest abruptly changed. The uncanny eye of Washington's Eathorne aided in gradually cutting the gap to the point where the Ducks were barely able to stave off a possible defeat.

Spectators were of the opinion that it was the 1945 quintet performing for the lemon and green and not the locals of this year's up-and-down fame. Oregon couldn't seem to miss in a first half that saw them head for the dressing room with a 36-18 lead.

Flanked by Ed Allen, ASUO president, and Signe Eklund, AWS president, crowd of students mass at the famous wroughtiron Dads Gates at the edge of the Old Campus to portray Oregon's spirit of welcome for visiting fathers.

The gates were constructed by the Oregon Dads club and the WPA; they were dedicated February 8, 1941, when over 3500 dads were invited to the campus to see Oregon play OSC, the Guild theater present Shakespeare's 'Taming of the Shrew,' and John Cavanaugh, ASUO president, campaign for a student union.
