

Law School Briefs Case For Traditional Weekend

By A. B. INITIO

The law school weekend with all its pre-war glory will be held May 4. This weekend is the outstanding function of spring term, and the entire University is looking forward to this gala event. There is much to be said concerning the numerous social events crowded into law school weekend, but that will be left to the columnist who devotes his efforts to reporting events of that description.

The law school baseball team always has a leading role in this large weekend, and by past events their traditional opponents, the bookkeepers school, more recently termed the business administration school, have the tough assignment of holding down the score of the victorious law school, a mean task for any of the undergraduate schools. However, the spirit of the men in Commerce hall is not to be belittled as it takes a great deal of courage to lose consistently and come back for more.

Strength in Vets

Returning veterans have strengthened the already strong law school baseball team. Early spring training recorded the largest turnout in many years, and a spirited battle will be waged for all positions. Coach Rollin Wood is undecided as to the right field position. Catherine Crombie and George Luoma are considered about even. At the present, Miss Crombie is considered a little stronger defensively.

Kermit Smith is expected to play a lot of first base. Smith is well known for his aggressiveness around the initial sack by past performances in two leagues in Alabama.

Second base will be held down by Raymond (Rex) Colton who formerly played with the Carlisle Indians. Colton's selection is also based on Coach Wood's recognition of a liberal Republican when he sees one.

Carmichael at Short

Robert Hogie Carmichael is scheduled to play shortstop. Carmichael is especially fast in fielding balls to his right and making that long throw to first. Also, he bats from the portside of the plate and can readily rattle the short right field boards.

Several candidates are competing for third base. Gene Conklin, Don Turner, and Buck Buell are all seasoned veterans around the hot corner, and a choice here will be most difficult. Buell, having logged more time in this position, is apt to gain the starting nod.

The outfield for the Shysters ball club is very powerful. Most of the men have press clippings to prove this. Applicants for the outer garden are Jesse James, "Peanuts" Lowry, Marcus Winkler, Alva Granquist, Billy Bernard, and a host of others. "Peanuts" Lowry is well known in baseball circles for his run-ins with the umpires, but this explosive personality also speaks through his bit bat.

Receiverships

Herman Hakner and Frank Meldrum are two capable receivers and can handle the several fast ball pitchers on the team's roster. Dean Hollis wants to pitch, but it is believed he will be more valuable to the team as an umpire. Professor G. Howard will be found in the third base coaching box to wave in the many ambulance chasers from Fenton hall. Professor Howard believes that it is liable to turn into a track meet, but forbids the use of spikes by the barristers.

The pitching assignment will be kept a secret until Orlando John Hollis announces "Play Ball!"

Food-Saving Campaign Under Way With Druids

Campus living organizations are beginning to follow the nationwide food conservation plan laid down by President Harry Truman, Bass Dyer, president of Druids, announced Wednesday. Druids, junior men's honorary, is organizing the University campaign with the aid of Charles Howard, professor of law.

Both the inter-fraternity council and the men's dormitories have indorsed the campaign, Dyer stated, and are making action through their organizations. Other campus living organizations will soon follow, he said.

Cut Waste!

The conservation program will be centered around this plea, the Druid president declared: Cut waste and eat less wheat products, fats and oils—substituting foods that are plentiful. Reduce the use of bread and other wheat foods by 40 percent and oils by 20 percent.

Mr. Howard, recently returned from the famine areas in Europe, said Wednesday that the bread ration in France is only about one-half a loaf a day—and most of their diet is bread. In Italy the bread ration is considerably less.

According to information from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the health of many Europeans is so bad, due to the food shortage, that millions are threatened with death by starvation. President Truman has said that food saved by the U.S. through this campaign will be shipped to starving millions abroad.
