Study Improvement Urged For Library

Mrs. Marian Watts, head of the reference library, urged in an effort to improve campus study conditions that students using their own texts and the books from the reserve room confine their studies to the sections beside and in the back of the reserve desk, the general reading room on the second floor, or the newspaper room in the basement.

Plans have been made to convert the cafeteria of the housing project into a well lighted room where it will be possible to study at night. It has been suggested that the University open some of the classrooms on the campus for night study, but at present the students can relieve the situation by studying in their living quarters, or using the above mentioned rooms.

Disabled Students To Get Assistance

Handicapped students who are non-veterans may obtain educational assistance through the vocational rehabilitation office, Lloyd J. Eppenbaugh, director of the Eugene bureau, announced today.

The U. S. Employment service has also been instructed to give special consideration to handicapped persons seeking work, said Mrs. Lucille Parsons, campus branch manager.

These statements of policy were released in line with "Employ the Handicapped" week, October 6 to 12.

Eppenbaugh explained that the purpose of vocational rehabilitation is to train disabled persons in some skill and asserted that tuition, books and supplies, medical care, and in some cases emergency maintenance are available. He urged all handicapped students to contact his office.

Mrs. Parsons emphasized that attention devoted to securing employment for handicapped persons is not restricted to veterans alone. She said that a partially disabled student may be recommended for light work, such as an office job, depending upon the nature of each case. In some instances there may be no restriction upon the type of work recommended.

The vocational rehabilitation agency is located in room 307 of the Miner building, downtown.

Outers Postpone Hike

The Outing club will have its Sunrise breakfast Sunday morning, October 20 and not October 13 as previously announced.

The hiking group plans an early morning hike to Hendricks park October 20 and they will prepare breakfast at the park. All women are invited to attend the breakfast and a sign-up sheet will be placed in Gerlinger hall later in the week.
