

Bulletin Tells Of U.N. Jobs

Opportunities open to college and university graduates in the newly established International Civil Service of the United Nations organization were emphasized in a bulletin recently received by the University student placement service from Helen G. Fisk, associate director of Western Personnel Service, which acts as a clearing house of information about occupations and student personnel work.

The personnel office of the United Nations in New York has employed 900 persons this year—interpreters, secretaries, typists, receptionists—to handle the clerical work of the organization, according to Miss Fisk.

Policies Established
The Legislative Assembly, which is the top governing body of the U. N., has already established two major policies of employment:

1. All employees must be employed on a competitive basis.
2. Due regard must be given to geographic distribution in making appointments.

Miss Mary Smieton from the Ministry of Labor of the United Kingdom was appointed to the post of chief personnel officer in May, 1946.

Many Types Needed
The work of the United Nations organization will demand the service of people from many types of professions. Attorneys, linguists, accountants and many other types of skilled workers will be needed.

A broad cultural background, some knowledge of the social sciences, and understanding of international problems will be essential in addition to preparation in one's specialty.
