(Continued from page one) lives when they found you had been connected with the WSSF," Liz commented. She reports that the funds seem to have been very well managed, and stressed that a little donated here, goes a long way, because the exchange in Paris is 120 francs to one American dollar.

From Brussels, Miss de Cou went to the conference in Switzerland at which many prominent religious leaders of both Europe and the United States were present, as well as the student representatives from all countries. The purpose of the conference was to help prepare the youthful leaders of the war-ravaged countries for the job of reconstruction in a psychological and philosophical way. "They have need of this kind of inspiration and reassurance to avoid the let down after the strain of war," Elizabeth said.

French Opera Student

Elizabeth is French, and had always wanted to see France. She went on her own to Paris, and living with a French family, she studied at the L'Alliance Francais, to which West Point sends its French instructors for training. Besides her French, Elizabeth also studied operatic literature and music, and attended the opera very often, sitting in the sixth balcony. Elizabeth observed that in the European schools a student is allowed to take any course if he can pass a test. In this way, she believes, the serious students can make faster progress by skipping some of the elementary courses which our schools require.

Food . . . Scarce!

"Of course, I enjoyed all the excitement and glamour of Paris," Liz exclaimed, "but food is very scarce, and when the fresh vegetables disappear from the market in the fall, the usual dish is very coarse noodles or macaroni. Of course," she explained, "if you can afford a black market dinner, you can have almost anything." The famous French wines and cheeses are still plentiful, she asserted.

There is very little coal in France, and the Paris winters are quite cold. Elizabeth recalled writing a letter to her mother in an unheated room when she had to wear several layers of woolen clothing, woolen socks and slippers, and even gloves to keep warm.

Elizabeth returned home just before Christmas, and said that the most wonderful things were to see the perfectly white bread—much different from the coarse, grey loaves Frenchmen are now eating—and eat all she wanted of her mother's wonderful Christmas cooking.

Intramural athletics at the University of Oregon were formerly known as the "Doughnut Cup League."
