

Annual Oratory Contest Slated

The annual state peace oratorical contest will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the music school auditorium. The contest is sponsored by the Intercollegiate Forensic Association of Oregon. Rex Gunn will represent the University with the speech, "An Oration on Peace."

Each speaker is limited to 1400 words or about ten minutes of speaking time. The oration must deal with peace and how to achieve it, and advocating war as a means of peace will not be allowed.

The winner will receive $50, which will be given by Mr. Rich L. Reimann, president of the Reimann furniture manufacturing company, Salem. Second and third prizes will be $15 and $7.50. The first and second winning manuscripts will be sent to the Intercollegiate Peace association where they will be judged in national competition. Chairman of the event is W. C. Balaire, associate professor of business administration.

Members of the league who are expected to participate include Oregon State college, Willamette university, Pacific college, Pacific university, Portland university, Linfield college, Lewis and Clark college, and the University of Oregon. The public is invited to attend the contest.

The Oregon scholarship committee meets only once a term.

Contrasting Views

(Continued from page one) cynic may depict a sewer inspector's view of the world, and his book will show the cruelty, brutality, the ignorance, the crime, superstition, which is all true, but not a true picture, asserted Dr. Odegard.

The view of the sentimentalist may be seen in the book, "Swords and Roses," a story of the civil war, which pictures everything a gallant affair, with none of the dead, disease, blood and dirt, he said, characterizing this view as one of lavender and old lace, with emphasis on the lavender.

"Most of us do what Walter Lippmann says not to do. That is, we define before we see, instead of seeing first and then defining," said Dr. Odegard.

The view of the sentimentalist and the cynic could be illustrated in almost any context, stated Dr. Odegard. As examples he cited the sentimentalist's tendency to remember the good old days, while the cynic recalls only the drops of the stock market and farm income.

The cynic would say that the United States is a nation of split personalities, but the sentimentalist would see a just nation, a protector of the weak, said Dr. Odegard.

Man, according to old Greek views, is connected to animals through his physical traits, and to the gods through his reason, explained Dr. Odegard. The monasteries in the middle ages were started so that man could discourage himself from animal traits and trust in reason alone, he said.

Dr. Odegard, in closing, advocated in the words of Henri Bergson, "Think as men of action, and act as men of thought."
