Boss Hobson Irons Out Kinks Preparing for Weekend Tilts

In preparation for their two weekend tilts with the Washington Huskies, Oregon's cagers spent a large share of yesterday's practice session ironing out the kinks in their fast break attack. Using two teams as units, Coach Howard Hobson had his men drilling on the recovery of rebounds and driving down court for rapid-fire shots.

As Hec Edmundson's quints are also famous for their

Each college in the conference is allowed four entries in each event, and since there are five teams in the ND approximateely 20 picked contestants will hit the pool in most of the races. Due to the tremendous capacity of the pool field house, Washington will play host to the other schools-Oregon, OSC, Washington State, and Idaho.

One of the most hotly-contested events will probably be diving. Ray Staub of OSC, Webfoots Benny Holcomb and Tom Corbett, and Washington's Newton and Hoff, have all displayed plenty of class in conference competition, and the crowdpleasing event will be given a prominent spot when the finals get under Hoop Review...

Husky is the word for hoopster Jim Bartelt, but despite that, he isn't inclined to fight. In fact, he doesn't even list boxing as one of his favorite sports. Instead he likes to play golf, swim, participate in baseball and of course play basketball

"I enjoy golfing, but I am not too good," he commented when asked about his achievement on the greens. He woudn't quote any figures on his above or below par score, but according to Stan Williamson, the reason for no comment on the score is obvious. Jim doesn't birdie too often. He can golf, swim, play baseball, that we know. How about his basketball record? First, let's point out that Jim didn't join the team until this term.

He was discharged from the service in November of last year and then re-enrolled at Oregon. He had played one season for the Ducks in 1944-45 before leaving for the service, and quickly won himself a berth on this year's team as soon as he turned out.

Since making the team, he has seen considerable action and turned in several outstanding performances, especially against the Washington Huskies in the first game. He is aggressive and watches the ball closely, ball hawker always. He is a good shot from his forward position and is hard to stop once he readies for a cast at the hoop.

Prior to playing for the Ducks, Jim was a member of Al Simpson's Ashland hoop quintet, winning allstate awards in 1944 as a prepper. agile Bartelt. He considers the lanky

Meanwhile, Oregon will travel to Seattle to battle it out with the Huskies for third and fourth place in the conference. These two games will bring to a close the 1947 basketball season for the Washington squad, but Oregon will return to Eugene to await the final tiff with Oregon State March 1.

Oregon State can clinch the title by beating Idaho twice before having to meet the runner-up Cougar quintet.
