

Counsel Service to Aid In Student Adjustment

Organization of a counseling service to assist students not getting the most out of University work was announced yesterday by Curtis E. Avery, registrar. The service has been set up to meet the growing need for testing, counseling, and advising students on an individual and specialized basis, Avery said.

Included in the new office will be the speech correction clinic, the reading clinic, and all the facilities of the University testing bureau. J. Spences Carlson, present head of the testing bureau, will be in charge of the service which will have its headquarters in Emerald hall.

Full Fall Service

A limited number of students will be taken for the remainder of this term and the service will be operating fully next fall, Avery said. Because of an expected large number who will want this work in the fall, students now on the campus should make reservations at once, Avery said. These should be made with the testing bureau in the men's physical education building.

"Not only will the counseling service help those students who have had difficulty in adjusting to University life, but it also will be of great value to any student who feels that he is not getting the most out of his work here," Avery said. "By guiding his work along the lines in which he is most interested and strongest, it can aid him in obtaining the satisfaction of doing a better job," he added.

Experts Available

To this end, the training and advice of experts in their fields will be made available through the new service. The reading clinic will be under the direction of Dr. P. A. Killgallon, professor of education, who has a long record of work in this field, particularly in remedial and corrective reading. Heading the speech clinic will be K. S. Wood, assistant professor of speech and drama, whose experience and training in speech correction will assist students needing this service. Dr. Leona Tyler, assistant professor of psychology, will act as counselor.

Sessions Pleased

(Continued from page one) age of 12. During the last two years at the University of California he has done his fastest work, he revealed. Last fall, for example, he composed a piano sonata in five weeks.

Sessions dates the beginning of contemporary music as the period immediately following the first World war. "Contemporary music," he said, "was a kind of pulling things together after the romantic movement had reached a dead end." The fact that the audience for contemporary music is increasing again now after the war shows that people need new expression after a period of world strife. During the depression, the withdrawal of a worried public caused a trend of lighter music to gain popularity. "You can't have art when people don't feel fully alive," Sessions explained.

Teaches Seminar

Sessions studied with Ernest Bloch, something, he said, that was better than any degree. Now, in addition to composition work of his own, Sessions teaches a seminar in composition, a course in musical analysis, and has taught an 850-student class an introduction to music course.

The composer expressed his hope that a growing interest in undertakings such as the festival will come about, and smiled graciously before turning to attend the next concert.
