Professor Gets
'Well Done'

Rex Underwood, professor of violin and director of orchestra in the University school of music received mention in the February 26, 1947 issue of El Universal, Mexico City daily newspaper on the Manuflex, originally invented by Professor Underwood for the exercise of violinists hands.

The El Universal article reads: "Rochester: The Mayo Clinic," by Prof. Aruualdo Caballas. El Universal, Mexico City Daily, February 26, 1947. In the St. Mary's Hospital there is a department called Occupational Therapy, which is devoted to supervising various exercises, such as weaving baskets, cloth, belts and other objects. These exercises are intended to strengthen nerves and muscles whose functioning is deficient due to some suffering. A very important apparatus for exercising the muscles of the hand is the Manuflex, whose inventor is the distinguished Professor Rex Underwood, of the University of Oregon. . . ."

Fellows Take Notice

If you want a date
To the Mortar Board dance,
Here's how you should act
So you'll have a chance.

Every day of the week
You should look ver-r-y vout;
Be mellow and smooth;
Go really all out.
Be especially attentive
To the girl you like best.
Show her you're interested—

Tell her it's Art Holman's music; the theme is
"THE GYPSIE'S CRYSTAL BALL"
She can get the ticket in her house or at the Co-op.
