

Deadline Set For Veterans' Book Purchases

The deadline for veteran students to pick up books and materials through G. I. bill requisitions has been set by the University for the fifth week of the term. After this date the Co-op will discontinue the issuance of school supplies by G.I. requisition for the remainder of the term.

The new five week limitation is made necessary by the increasing number of veterans whose schooling eligibility under the G.I. bill is running out.

According to Assistant Registrar James B. Kline, notification of a veteran's ineligibility is often slow in reaching the University, and consequently neither the school nor the student affected can be sure of the exact date when the G.I. aid expires.

The five-weeks' deadline provides the Co-op with an opportunity to check on the eligibility of all the University veterans, and to obtain a list of those who will be ineligible to receive books and supplies under G.I. requisitions next term.

The Co-op also uses the breathing spell afforded by the new time limitation to prepare the term's backlog of G. I. requisition bills for presentation to the University. These bills must be turned in by the Co-op before the end of the term.

If a veteran's eligibility runs out in the last half of a term the veterans administration will pay tuition, subsistence and materials expenses for the full term.

Veterans whose eligibility expires before the first half of a term will receive subsistence and tuition on a per diem basis until the date on which their eligibility expires.

Pacific Coast Women Tallest; Pounds Spread Across Nation

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 (UP)—The Army said today that the nation's tallest women come from the Pacific coast. But—

It was also found that women's weight was fairly evenly distributed throughout the nation, but it didn't know yet which region produces the shapeliest ones. Eventually, the "figures" will be shown.

Furthermore, the army said its studies showed a "significant variation of stature" by regions.

The findings were based on measurements of 8,259 white women who served in the WAC and nurses' corps during the war. The quartermaster corps took measurements at separation centers in hope of putting clothing procurement on a scientific basis.

It wanted to know, for example, how many nurses' uniforms per thousand should be patterned for women who were five feet tall and weigh 120 pounds. Also, it wanted to know how many per thousand weigh 175 pounds.

Data thus far indicates that clothing sent to induction centers in the future may have to take regional variations of height into account.

The survey showed medium height of army nurses from the Pacific coast was one inch greater than those from any other area and that Pacific coast Wacs also were taller than the average.

Women born in New England or the middle Atlantic region of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania were on the average shorter. The regional breakdown was made on the basis of where the women were born, rather than where they were inducted.

Army statisticians discovered that when the total tonnage, age and height of the 8,259 women was added up and divided by 8,259 the answer was a "mean average" woman who was 26 years and seven months old, five feet four inches tall, and weighed 133 pounds.

Taft and his party left late tonight for Casper and Cheyenne, Wyo., the last scheduled stops on his stumping swing through western United States.

Earlier Taft said there was "no foundation" to a rumor that he planned to form a coalition with Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota to gain the Republican presidential and vice-presidential nominations in a stop-Dewey movement.
