

Dr. Fogdall Gives Help In Studies

Students can help themselves over some of the rough spots in college by observing suggestions offered in a list of "ten tips for scholastic success" drawn up by Dr. Vergil S. Fogdall, assistant dean of men.

In picking courses, the dean advises students to choose those that relate to their general interests and vocational goals.

Dr. Fogdall rates time schedules as important guides for arranging study hours, and urges students working part-time not to let jobs interfere with their success in college. Putting off work, he points out, is certain to result in later overloads. Studying should be done regularly.

Promptness Urged

Written work should be done in the manner requested, and should meet the deadline set by the instructor, the dean urges. Accurate records of all work covered in the students' courses should be kept, according to Fogdall, and complete notes on all lectures, plus study notes should be compiled during the term.

Efficient studying is largely dependent on the pupil's surroundings, Dr. Fogdall points out, and urges comfortable, well furnished study rooms.

Health Important

"Adequate sleep, healthful food and clean living habits will pay good dividends in scholarship," he asserted.

Dr. Fogdall warns against cheating on examinations, pointing out detrimental results of such practices on scholarship.

Techniques of studying effectively can be acquired by students through reading books devoted to recommended "An Outline of Best Methods of Studying," and Studying Effectively," now on sale at the Co-op. The University library is acquiring a collection of books dealing with study methods.

Students having personal study problems may receive help and counseling from their professors, the University academic advisor, or the dean of men and dean of women's offices.
