

Religious Group Hears Report On Conference

Russel Fuller spoke to the Disciples (Christian) Student Fellowship at an informal luncheon Monday.

Fuller, a Michigan senior in sociology, participated in the Oslo, Norway, conference of Christian young people, which was attended by 1200 young Protestants from almost every country.

"A high point in the Conference was reached," he remarked, "when a Chinese school teacher from Switzerland carried out a worship service prepared by absent Japanese students, who were unable to obtain exit approval from the military government."

The summer conference of the World Student Christian federation at Lundsburg, Sweden was also attended.

After this conference Fuller worked with other students in Bievers, France. "We helped rebuild the country estate which is the home of the World Student Christian foundation," he related.

He also spoke of the program adopted by Michigan Disciples Fellowship. "Probably the oldest," he said, "and most complete work of its type among Christian church houses on University campuses." Worship services, discussion materials and recreational plans were given to the student group sponsored by Dr. Victor P. Morris.

Fuller is traveling this term for the Disciples Student fellowship, speaking before Christian church student groups.

The University of Oregon was the eleventh campus on his tour.
