

Extension Panel Plans Program

Final plans for a series of seminars on personal problems of daily living, to be sponsored by the general extension division of the Oregon State system of higher education were made Thursday.

"This is the first series of its kind to be used in Oregon communities," commented Mrs. Jenvelle Moorhead, associate professor of physical education, "and, feeling that there is a definite need for such education, we are hoping for successful results in this experiment." Mrs. Moorhead had charge of planning the content of the seminars and will act as director for the entire series.

Westport and its neighboring communities will be the scene of the first seminar series to be held there November 6, 7, and 8. All schools in Westport will be closed that Friday and Thursday enabling the teachers to attend the lectures and discussion groups.

Parents in the community will be urged to attend too, Mrs. Moorhead said, hoping for an even balance between the two groups.

The program during the two and a half sessions will include lectures by the participating faculty members of the touring panel, panel discussions, and small discussion groups for all those attending.

Fields represented in the lectures will be sociology, psychology, general education, and health education. The medical viewpoint will be given in each community by a local physician or a health officer, said the director, Mrs. Moorhead.

Specific phases to be covered during the program include: changes in the basis of marriage and family life today; the importance of community influence on child behavior; influence of early childhood experience in personality development; physiological and psychological problems of various age levels; problems of personal adjustment; and plans for families utilizing community facilities. According to the director in

'Cool Water' Awaiting Sophs Nabbed With Whiskers Down

"Cool, Clear, Water" awaits all sophomore men who have hit their razors before today's game and who are apprehended at the game. Names of those who have ignored the no-shave edict will be read at half-time, according to Ed Anderson, Skull and Dagger president.

A special barrel has been prepared for the dunking in the middle of the field and each violator will be tossed head first into it.

Yesterday's dunking saw High Sheriff Jack Schnaidt, hitting the tub along with the violators. Schnaidt protested that his room-mates had shaved him but his protests ended in gurgles.

Men who did not show up for yesterday's dunking in front of the Side will receive "invitations" to inspect the barrel at the game today.

charge, those taking the course for college credit must work out written projects following the lectures on an analysis of behavior problems in terms of their local communities.

Other participants in the panel besides Mrs. Moorhead are: Dr. Noel Berreman, associate professor of sociology; Dr. O. R. Chambers, head of the psychology department at Oregon State; and Dr. James Caughlan, assistant professor of education of the general extension division.

Mrs. Moorhead added that the seminar series will be available to all interested communities in Oregon through the extension division, and that definite plans had been made for the panel to visit the Grants Pass and Astoria areas later in the year.

Seating Notice

A special rope barrier will divide the Oregon rooting section into two sections for today's University of San Francisco game, according to Ed Dick, president of Order of O. All men will sit in the north section, while women will be seated in the south portion of the stands.

"We are doing this to enforce the University tradition of separating the men from the women at sports events," Dick explained.
