Sigurd Nilssen, UO Professor Plans January Concert Tour

Sigurd Nilssen, famous opera and concert star and professor of voice at the University until last year, will begin a concert tour in January.

Nilssen joined the music school staff in 1940, after leaving his professional career because of ill health. "I really came back to Oregon to die," he said, "but got well instead." He retired from the school of music in 1946.

Protege Honored

His protege, Marie Rogndahl, was chosen "Undiscovered Voice of America" by the Hour of Charm program while she was studying music here in 1944. She is now singing with the Metropolitan opera company.

Nilssen's concert itinerary will begin with an appearance in Salem, followed by performances in Seattle, Bellingham, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C., San Francisco, Sacramento, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and San Diego. In August he will appear in a Mexican opera.

Foreign Debut

Following his debut at Monte Carlo, Nilssen gave 20 command performances before European royalty, including the king of England at St. James palace, London, and the duke of Monaco. In America, one of his performances of Stravinsky's operas "Oï d' Epus-Rex" was the first radio broadcast from the Metropolitan opera company stage. Tschaichovsky conducted the performance and the Harvard glee club sang the chorus.

Now a resident of Eugene, Nilssen was born in Perry, Ore., in 1895. He is a graduate of the Whitman conservatory of music in Walla Walla, Wash., and continued his studies in New York and Europe. At present he gives private vocal lessons in Eugene and Portland.

Sang Arias

Nilssen was feature don "Fire-side Recital," American radiator company radio program, and in 1936-37 he held leading roles with Hippodrome opera company in New York.
