

Club May Send 'Lost and Found' Items See Dust; UofO Students Students Seldom Reclaim Trivia To Conference

Possibility of sending delegates from the local International Relations club to the Northwest regional conference to be held in Vancouver, B. C., November 21 and 22 was discussed at the club meeting Tuesday.

Dr. Charles Schleicher, adviser for the group, expressed the hope that a way would be worked out soon to enable at least three or four interested students from Oregon to attend the Canadian conference. Topic of discussion for the two-day meeting will be "Can the split between East and West be Reconciled?"

Tentative plans for the program of the meeting are centered around three round-tables, each holding three sessions during the two days. Problems and information concerning the clash in United Nations organization will be discussed in the first round-table. European trouble is the topic for the second, and the third group will discuss condition in Asia.

Last year's International Relations regional conference was held in Portland, Schleicher commented. Funds to sponsor the meetings held annually in different parts of the United States come from the Carnegie Endowment fund for international peace, he added.

Following a brief talk by Bob Allen, president of the club, about the future of the local club, its

One-way traffic seems to apply to the lost and found articles that accumulate in the campus lost and found department situated in the physical plant post office. Every day a variety of students' possessions find their way thence, never to be resurrected by their rightful owners.

The AOPI house librarian (judging from the library notice in the pocket) is only one of the several to be minus a coat. Not even the rain can coax students to claim their coats, jackets, bandanas, and hats, it seems.

Books Stacked

A variety of text books are gathering dust on the shelves of the lost and found office, including Don Farnam's English workbook Glenn's principles of accounting, George Martin's German text, and Blucher's algebra book. Notebooks of all sizes, some with voluminous notes, others with impressive doodlings, or suggestive blank pages

Perhaps the person that went to the trouble of administering a series of Wechsler-Bellevue tests would like to know that his or her folder of tests can be obtained at the lost and found headquarters.

Could it be that the owners of the many unclaimed pairs of glasses cannot find the lost and found office? Whatever the cause, the department has gathered a carton of glasses and cases.

Donna's Pin There

Lou Ann Parker's letter from Washington D. C. and a pin belonging to someone named "Donna" are among the conglomeration of articles that appear to be "no sooner out of sight, than out of mind."

All of these and many others, have wandered away from their owners and are biding their time in the physical plant post office, the home of the lost and found department, until reunited with their possessors.

Stinks, Too

Dissect this kind of verbal flub-dub and you find obscurity; sometimes masquerading as technical accuracy, sometimes as subtlety. But lack of clarity, no matter how learned, is not subtle. It is just unclear.

There are also the classifiers. Education texts are the worst offenders here. First you find 14 "cardinal principles," then each principle has a certain number of general objectives. Each general objective, of course, has oodles of specific objectives.

A Common Ill

Speech texts go in for this, too. There are five types of speeches, seven helps toward learning, and three methods of topic development. This is true regardless of whether a student can speak or not. Out of such stuff come 20-point questions on midterms.

If these offending authors would state what they have to say clearly and tersely, most of their books would be mere pamphlets.

Maybe I couldn't do better, but I'm sure they could.

Plymouth Club to Party

"Congo Club" will be the theme of the Plymouth club party tonight beginning at 7:30 at the First Congregational church. Warren Miller will be the master of ceremonies and an entertainment program will feature a floor show, trio, and other acts.

Refreshments will be served and there will be a 25c charge for those attending.

liaison officer to be appointed from the Oregon graduate school who will be responsible for the course and thesis supervision of any Oregon graduate students enrolled in the graduate school of nuclear engineering, Johnson revealed.

The Oregon graduate school will maintain certain requirements such as residence and thesis supervision.

The minimum residence requirement is one year for the degree of Ph.D. The program of the school will be highly individualized. All work taken in nuclear engineering will be examined and acceptance of credits will be by individual merit of the work done.
