Harassed Husbands Organize For Short Skirts, Lower Costs

(this article is rewritten from a story printed in the Portland "Sun" on November 9, 1947)

By JIM WALLACE

More troops are rapidly joining the battle of the hemline as irate boyfriends and harassed husbands flock to the ranks of "MOWS," (Men's Organization to War on Styles) in an attempt to keep the skirtline from dropping even lower.

The MOWS movement was started in Portland by gentleman whose name is listed as Mr. Mows on organization stationery. According to Mows the attempt to hold the hemline is a serious matter with which nations as well as individuals must deal.

Government Ruling

He pointed out that the British labor government officially ruled that the clothing industry must comply with shorter skirt lengths in an effort to conserve material and bring down living costs. Mows further emphasized that the CIO has tabbed the "new look" as "a conspiracy aimed at the people."

According to Mows, the most effective method of discouraging the long skirt is for popular athletes and male students to cut dates or voice emphatic disapproval of girls who wear long dresses.

There is a Little Below the Knee club in the Frisco bay area with 1500 members and a Women's Organization to War on Styles with over a thousand members. In Georgia there is a League of Broke Husbands whose slogan is "Keep dresses shorter so they may be worn longer."

Smart Girls

The Portland organization, which now claims 6000 members, echoes the attitude of various publications and prominent people who have stated that, "If a girl has good legs and she is smart she will not cover them up."

Mr. Mows closed his remarks on current styles by saying that American women have fought long to emancipate themselves from slavery, discrimination, and other bondages and that they will not forsake their freedom for fashion.

Horace Robinson, director of "The Man Who Came to Dinner," took the University theater production to Roseburg veterans hospital last night.

WAA Invites Girls To Athletic Day

All University of Oregon co-eds are invited to a sports day that the Women's Athletic association at Stanford is having with the University of California and Mills college. Tennis, badminton, hockey, and swimming will be featured.

The activities will start at 9:30 Saturday morning. Any girl wishing to attend is asked to sign up at the women's physical education department in Gerlinger.

Oregana Picture Schedule Given

Men of Merrick and Stan Ray halls will have photographs taken today for the 1948 Oregana. Tomorrow Kennell-Ellis studio will complete pictures of San Ray hall residents and Theta Chi members.

The journalism building cockroaches have moved with the Emerald staff to the quonset hut.

Pres. Newburn to Speak

President Harry K. Newburn will speak at a banquet of the Seattle alumni association Tuesday evening in Seattle. Accompanied by Les Anderson, alumni secretary, he will leave Eugene by plane Tuesday and return Wednesday.

Also scheduled to appear at the meeting is John McGregor, past president of the Oregon alumni association of New York, where he is still a resident.

Motion pictures of the Oregon-Washington game will be shown at the banquet.
