President Harry Truman's informal conference, and speeches by Secretary of National Defense James V. Forrestal and Vice-Chairman of the Atomic Energy Comsion W. W. Waymack highlighted Washington, D. C., according to Hans Wold, delegate from the Oregon chapter at the national professional journalistic fraternity meeting November 11 through 14.

President Truman held the inforus mal conference for delegates in the White House on Wednesday, November 12.

Stressing good reporters as the first necessity of a newspaper, Truman told the group if he were to attempt to run a newspaper he twould hire a group of first class orpolice reporters and let the columnrillists take care of themselves.

wn "If you can learn to recognize a is-fact," the chief executive continatued, "then you are well on the way hn toward being a competent reporter. When you get tired of persuing facts," he added with a smile, "and n-start presenting your own opinions, on then you're a columnist."

is the "hangout" of some of the people and the press of this councapitol's top-flight columnists.

"I was told many Washington writers cover their beats from a table in this club," related Wold. "They read reports and press releases, interview each other, and bringing to the world the awarethe Sigma Delta Chi convention in then write their material. Their columns are often a compiling of news and rumor drawn from fellow correspondents."

> Waymack stressed the need for more and better understanding of atomic energy in his address before the delegates at a luncheon November 12. Former editor of the Des Moines Register-Tribune, he called for a layman on the staff of every metropolitan newspaper who can give an intelligent appraisal of atomic energy.

"The public is hungry for news," averred Waymack, "and the press nalism class instructed by Jack should recognize the importance Billings upon his return to the camof the current lack of knowledge of the atomic energy field."

Waymack pointed out to the delegates that the United States must continue to go ahead in the field and not rest on what it has done.

Two hours on a sight-seeing tour Saturday, added to his own observations during the previous days, left Wold "properly" impressed with the nation's capital. He found it to be a clean, beautiful, wellwhich opened the informal side of planned city, and one in which he would like to spend more time.

Business and organization sessions were held morning and afternoon through the four-day meet. Panel discussions pertaining to the field of journalism and discussions of mutual problems and interests interspersed the sessions.

Elected national secretaray of the fraternity was John M. Mc-Clelland Jr., editor of the Longview Daily News in Longview, Washington.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was chosen for the site of the 1948 convention, at the invitation of the Marquette university chapter. Washington and Lee university and Washington professional chapter were co-hosts to this year's convention.

Secretary of National Defense Forrestal called journalism the greatest profession in his banquet address to the Sigma Delta Chis November 14.

Largely upon the shoulders of the try, he said, rests the future of the people and nations of the world.

The press, continued Forrestal, must play an important part in ness that the United States is, as a nation, the embodiment of common freedoms. Unless the press fulfills its role the peoples of the world will not look to the United States for leadership in attaining the better way of life.

He urged the press and the people not to become impatient in their struggle to straighten out the international tangle left by the world wars.

Wold reported his trip to Washington before an elementary jourpus. He also presented a report to the Oregon Sigma Delta Chi chapter, sponsors of his trip east.
