wasted this way. Few accents were consistent throughout, particularly in the minor roles.

Makeup, lighting, and the setting were well handled, but several minor discrepancies occurred, such as, the jug in Act 3 was handled as though there were nothing in it, Christy's high-styled, shiny boots seemed out of harmony, and the cheering at the races was so organized that it sounded painfully artificial. The enthusiasm over the race seemed flat and forced.

The play was excellently written and is considered a top example of Irish drama. Probably because of the unfamiliarity of the American public with Irish folk-lore, language, and country people, it was difficult for the audience to become really interested in the characters and their problems. Only at the climax of the play was there genuine concern about what was going to happen.

As a fine example of Irish drama the play can hardly be excelled. From this standpoint, for giving the actors a chance at difficult dialogue and accents, and for helping to widen the range of the audience experience in plays, "Playboy of the Western World" was an excellent choice.

this month by the Robert Mitchell Boy Choir received the blessing of Bing Crosby and thereby seems on the way to popularity. This 20-voice boy choir was praised by Crosby as the "best in the world" after appearing with him in "Going My Way" and "Bells of St. Mary's." Be that as it may, we found it very enjoyable listening with excellent arrangements and performances. Includes "Adeste Fideles," "Silent Night," "Ave Maria," and a medley of "Good King Wenceslas," "Deck the Halls," and "Jingle Bells."

that out of 13,000 counts, one showed a signet (whatever that is) of malaria. How they spot one out of 13,000 I don't know, but for my money, that's pretty shrewd detecting.

Nurse Is Hush-Hush

The night nurse was a peach. I asked her what my temperature was and she looked as if I'd asked her to reveal one of the atomic secrets. I tried to settle for my pulse readings but she wouldn't bargain. I tried to count it myself, but on two counts wound up with only 12 per minute. Something around 70 or 80 is normal.

It looks like the new Oregon spirit has invaded the germless halls of the infirmary too. Now if they'd just get in a new stock of pajamas . . . WITH drawstrings . . .

It's an ill wind that blows. No? Good!
