

Campus Heads Exchange Ideas

Returning here after attending the ninth annual convention of the Oregon Federation of Collegiate Leaders on the Oregon college campus Barbara Johns, Howard Lemons, and Bob Frazier, University of Oregon delegates to the meeting, reported a full day of conferences and meetings with the leaders from other schools.

Representatives from virtually every college in the state were present for the convention, which discussed inter-campus relationships and the place of activities in college life at the Friday sessions.

The three University delegates will return to the Corvallis campus Saturday morning, when Frazier will lead a panel on the role of the college editor in student affairs. The Saturday group will also discuss faculty-student relationships.

Delegates reported that the first day's meetings proved profitable to them in discussing problems common to all campuses. Among problems that appeared to be of primary concern were the place of political pressure groups on the campuses, payment of student government officers, overloaded activity programs, the high cost of name dance bands, financing student government, and the fact that on all campuses a small number of people appear to carry all activities.

The group also expressed concern that oftentimes students enroll in the wrong school, and then stay there out of a spirit of school loyalty. At noon Friday they heard Dan Poling, dean of men at Oregon state college, speak on the place of activities in the educational program.

The Oregon delegation expressed appreciation for the courtesy extended them by student body officers at the state college, and reported they were shown "every courtesy" on the northern campus.

Bob Frazier, Emerald editor, spent much of Friday afternoon with Ben Howe, editor of the Oregon State Barometer, and the two editors ironed out a number of difficulties that have kept alive a cross-campus feud for many years.

With the Greatest of Ease, Apparently

Howard Hughes's $23,000,000 plywood flying boat Hercules, which many people thought would never fly, is shown at anchor in Los Angeles Harbor just before it was flown on a short hop by Hughes during taxi tests. Spotlight of a Senate investigation into Hughes's $40,000,000 worth of government warplane contracts, the world's largest flying boat weighs 200 tons, can carry 700 passengers, has eight 3000 hp motors. Hull is 220 feet long, 30 high, 25 wide. Wingspread is 320 feet.

Kiss to Speak Of Campus Life

Dr. Ferenc Kiss, professor of anatomy and histology and dean of the faculty at the University of Budapest, will be the speaker at the regular meeting of the Inter-University Christian fellowship in the dining room of John Straub hall tonight at 7.

President of the Free Church Movement in Hungary, he will speak on religious life in the Danubian states from the standpoint of the student and on the fundamentals of Christian faith.

Dr. Kiss is currently conducting a nation-wide lecture tour of colleges and universities, under the auspices of the United States Inter-University Christian fellowship of which the Oregon IVCF is a chapter.

It is an interdenominational organization designed to meet the need of university students. Its program encourages daily prayer, Bible study and Christian fellowship.

Course Organized In Home Nursing

The Red Cross college unit has organized a home nursing course for the wives of veterans on the campus, to begin today, home nursing chairman Marie Hatsup announced.

The 12-hour course, under the instruction of Mrs. Annette Aylworth, will be given in a three-week period, the afternoon class meeting from 2:30 to 4:30 and the evening class from 7:30 to 9:30 on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Phi Kaps to Build House on Campus

Delegates attending the national convention of Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity at Columbus, Ohio, reported the decision of the national organization to loan the funds needed for building a fraternity house on the University of Oregon campus.

Librarian Sets Book Promotion

Miss Bernice Rise, newly appointed readers consultant, has announced her plans for promoting more awareness among students of the library and the browsing room.

For the browsing room, Miss Rise plans weekly book discussion by various professors and graduate students of both old and new books, plays, and poetry. Also to be presented in the library are movies and records of poetry readings, and musical selections.

Miss Rise is enlarging the collection of prints of old paintings, which may be checked out for half a term at a time by students, and renewed as often as they wish.

A complete book list of the best books in all fields is being made by Miss Rise for the convenience of both students and alumni. The list will contain the name of the book, the price, publisher, date of publication, and a sentence or two telling about the contents.

Miss Rise is planning to expand the house library system to every living organization on the campus. Oregon was one of the first to have house libraries, but it is becoming popular on many campuses throughout the nation, Miss Rise said.

President Truman, in his annual budget message, asked for an extra $6,000,000 now and $38,000,000 during the 1949 fiscal year to carry out "an effective foreign informational and cultural program."
