HOUSING SURVEY

cleaning agency that serves the Flats and Wood works six nights a month at the Junior Canteen and Community Center.

For recreation, the Woods take in the Westminster House pot-lucks, with Sally Anne enjoying the outing, too, and Anne attends the Dantes Club at the YMCA. An infrequent show is viewed for variety.

Another couple whose recreation is "practically nil"—to quote them—is Robert and Bea McConnell. A freshman in pre-med, Robert has his BA degree in education from the Southern Idaho College of Education; Bea is also a graduate of that school. Robert spent three and one-half years in the army and has taught one year.

Extra income is supplied by Robert's check from a downtown store. Bea goes home to Idaho in the summer to can vegetables, fruits and meat, which see them through the winter on the food problem.

Playing cards with the neighbors upstairs constitutes most of the McConnell's recreation. But Karen, who is almost three, and year-old Bobby keep their parents entertained and busy. Like most other mothers in the Flats, Bea keeps her children indoors most of the time to avoid mud puddles and construction workers.

There are other things homeplanners in the Flats agree on. Generally, they have come to three major conclusions:

Efficient housekeeping is very difficult in the summer dust and winter mud of the Flats; very careful planning is necessary to make ends meet and keep up the standards they have set; most of all, the families are anxious to finish school and launch into their own careers in a competitive society that recognizes common problems and hardships.
