Land Down Under Extending Open Arms to Yank Immigrants

Australia's doors are open to American immigrants interested in post-war immigration, according to information received from John Hewitt, press attache for the Australian consulate general.

Hewitt forwarded a booklet, "The Australian Commonwealth Invites the U. S. Veteran to a New Life in Australia," to the University in order that Oregon veterans can become acquainted with conditions in the "down under" country.

The publication invites any American veteran to apply for passage partly paid for himself and his dependents to Australia. However, it warns that the invitation doesn't include a guarantee to success on the island.

Jobs Available

Jobs are available in new industries and national projects: living costs compare well with those of American towns; reemployment allowances are given. But Australians don't wish to offer these opportunities to veterans anxious to return to their country just for the boom it experienced during the war years.

The Australian minister for immigration and information has written: "We have not yet built the ideal society, but we have gone a long way in reducing financial strain in family life, and in offsetting the costs of ill health and irregular employment. We have done this mainly by paying maternity allowances, child endowment, unempling between 9-10 a.m. and 11 a.m.-noon.

Each player must play off her matches as scheduled or arranged so that the double elimination system will not be mixed up, Miss Bowman declared.

ployment and sickness benefits—and we are gradually developing comprehensive schemes of free medical treatment, free dental aids, and so on. As permanent residents of Australia, you will be eligible for these social service benefits."

Veterans interested in Australia's offer of assisted passages can get full details from the Australian embassy in Washington, or the Australian consulates-general in New York and San Francisco.
