

DUCK TRACKS

By DON FAIR

The Oregon-Oregon State basketball game scheduled at McArthur court, February 20 is a complete sellout, and no tickets will be sold at the door either for Webfoot students or adults. Since this is the last day for University rooters to pick up their student activity books, they had better do so immediately if they want to see those Duck-Aggie battles.

Dick Wilkins, classy Webfoot forward, has moved into second place in the ranks of the all-time Northern Division scoring leaders, with 584 points in 56 games, for a 10.4 average. Wilkins trails the current titleholder, Red Rocha of OSC, by only 50 points.

With seven games still remaining on the Oregon schedule, Wilkins stands a better than even chance to crack the existing mark, by averaging just over seven points per contest. However Wilkins has had the advantage over Rocha, in that the Duck cager was able to put in four years of varsity competition because of wartime rules.

Other Active High Scorers

Other ND basketballers, who are playing this year, and rank among the top ten in total scoring are Vince Hanson of WSC, and Jack Nichols and Bob Jorgensen of Washington. Hanson is fourth with 520 points, followed by Nichols with 503.

Jorgensen, another four-year varsity man, is seventh with a 478 total. Two other Webfoot hoopsters are also in this select group. Laddie Gale is eighth, and Slim Wintermute tenth.

In the Southern Division, the only active cager who has a high point-gathering ability is Andy Wolfe of California, with 336 markers for fifth high. Stanford's great Hank Luisetti is the holder of the SD record with 612 for 36 games or an even 17 point average.

There is an interesting story how the Idaho teams came to be tagged with the nickname Vandals. In 1919 when the Idahoans were running roughshod over Northwest competition, one Moscow professor remarked that the basketball team played a fierce brand of ball "like the Norsemen of old."

Sports Editor Sticks on Name

The sports editor of the Idaho campus newspaper at that time picked up the phrase and from it stuck the moniker of "Vandals" on the Idahoans. This tag was not officially adopted by the football and baseball teams until two years later, but since then, Idaho has been known by no other such descriptive term.

That 27-23 Washington win over Oregon State last Saturday seems to have left a somewhat doubtful impression in league circles. Apparently Slat Gill, Beaver coach, instructed his team to pass, pass and pass some more, until they had worked free for an almost certain basket.

The result, one time, was that OSC made 34 consecutive passes before firing at the basket. Art McLarney, Husky mentor, could do nothing about the tactics except tell his cagers to avoid overchecking and fouling the Aggies. This added up to a grand total of 50 points for both teams.

Spectators Want Colorful Action

Whether this was good strategy on the part of Gill is his problem alone, but this brand of basketball doesn't do much to help gate receipts. Spectators don't slap down their hard-earned $1.20 every weekend to see a cage game of ring-around-the-rosy. What the fans yelp for today is race horse, fast break, hell-for-leather basketball.

That's one reason why the Webfoots are so popular in Seattle. When they get out on the floor, the crowd knows that it is in for an evening of colorful, spectacular hoop sport.

With the Frosh playing Salem tonight, look closely at this Capitol city five. According to Yearling mentor Carl Heldt, the Vikings are the best drilled team which the Frosh have played this season. However Heldt said that Salem might lack the height and reserves to go too far in the state basketball tourney.

The Duckling mentor listed Klamath Falls as having the best all round squad. He feels that the Pelicans have 10 men of about equal merit, which makes them an exceptionally tough club to defeat.

The Northern Division officiating situation doesn't seem to be getting any better. Two referees have already resigned, including promising Dwight Scheyer. Paul Warren is out for good with a heart ailment. With the blood-hungry crowds that are now in the gyms for every league contest, it's no wonder that the whistle-tooters have the opinion that there must be an easier, and safer, way to make a living.

In an intramural basketball play yesterday afternoon, four quintets posted reasonably easy victories over their opponents while two others were handed wins via the forfeit route. Results were: SPE edged out the Legal Eagles 33-27; the Amazon Vets thumped Phi Sigma Kappa 17-10; Psi Kappa Psi rolled over the Yeomen 27-18; Lambda Chi Alpha annihilated Sherry Ross hall 34-12; Pi Kappa Alpha and the House of Lords were given credit for their games when YMCA and the Independents failed to appear at game time.

Spees Over Eagles

A concerted drive in the elated half by the Legal Eagles fell short of its goal as Sigma Phi Epsilon defeated the Lawyers by a 33-27 count. Bucketsmiths Gordon Albright and Jack Hannon dropped in

Handball Results

In intramural handball action yesterday afternoon, Alpha Tau Omega shut out the Kappa Sigs 3-0.

Handball team managers are requested to turn in lineups of their teams before game time. This lineup must state the position the participant will play that day and give the games of the doubles team. This lineup must be turned in to Jim Vitti, intramural sports manager, as soon as possible before each scheduled handball game.

and Reedy Berg were given the go-ahead sign by Warren. This will be one of the few times that the plucky Berg has started for the Ducks this year, a reward which he gained by his steady, dependable playing throughout each contest.

Reserves to See Action

Warren hinted that he would be using lots of reserves, with Bob Don, Kenny Seeborg, Lynn Hamilton, Jim Bartelt, Bob Lavey, and Bob Amacher all slated for a good share of duty.

The Vandals will be using their hang-tough five of Dick Giesler and Linck, forwards; Jay Gano, center; and Joe Grove and Brimhall, guards. Other members of the Idaho traveling team are John Evans, Jack Rainey, Wendell Christensen, Harold Jaussi, Bill Eimers, Gerald Gunnels, and John Taylor.

Brimhall Leads

Leading scorer for the dark-horse Vandals is Brimhall, with 71 points. Linck, who has been a starter in only the last three games, has 46 points to his credit, including 22 against Oregon in the second game at Moscow.

Tomorrow night the same two teams will be at it again, starting at 8 p. m., preceded by the Frosh-Oregon City tilt at 6:15.

Yeomen Lose

A stubborn and greatly improved Yeomen crew fought bitterly but vainly as it was beaten into submission by Phi Kappa Psi 27-18. The Yeomen showed a better organization in this game than at any other time this season. Russ Rohwer's ten points was tops for the Phi Kap gang.

Hallmen Drop One

In the finals of the afternoon, Lambda Chi Alpha rambled over Sherry Ross hall in a 34-12 triumph. Bill Lewellen was the big gun in the Lambda Chi attack as he pumped in 14 points.
