

U.N. Position Will be Left By Gromyko

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., May 13 —Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko soon will be replaced—probably permanently—as Russia's chief delegate to the United Nations, it was learned tonight.

The 38-year-old Soviet diplomat will be replaced by Jacob A. Malik, another deputy foreign minister and a major figure in the conduct of Russian foreign policy in the far east, Malik, already on his way here by plane from Berlin, is the man who handed Russia's official declaration of war on Japan in 1945.

Gromyko confirmed that he was leaving the UN assignment in the next few weeks to take a long-delayed vacation in Russia.

He was asked if he would be back in the UN assignment for the UN general assembly meeting next fall in Paris. Smiling and in an affable mood, Gromyko replied with a shrug: "I do not know. The list of delegation members has not been drawn up yet. I do not know what I will be doing in September."

The development, even if only temporary, represented a major shift in the Kremlin's foreign personnel.

And in addition to Gromyko's own hint of another assignment there were substantial reasons for believing the solemn, taciturn UN spokesman for the Soviet Union was headed for new and probably bigger things.

One of his principal aides said Gromyko had more than two months vacation due him and that he would leave "in a week or a month" to begin it.

The switch will remove from the United Nations, at least temporarily, one of diplomacy's most colorful and best-known characters.

The stolid, broad-shouldered Gromyko, whose name in Russian means "thunder," has been with the United Nations since its conception in the Dumbarton Oaks conferences of 1944.

To the Western world, and particularly to the United States, he has become a symbol of the Soviet Union and its foreign policy. His name even became part of America's slang vocabulary when, after his famous walk out of the UN security council in the Iranian case of 1946, Americans began to speak of "taking a Gromyko."

Since that day Gromyko's name has been headline material and his actions have commanded more than ordinary attention from the press and public.

Gromyko's muscular right arm has signalled almost everyone of Russia's 24 vetoes in the UN security council.

Henderson Named

(Continued from page one) tempted to find a legal means to allow other nominations for the office. A motion was passed to suspend the rules to allow petitioners for senior class offices to be nominated for the ASUO No. 2 position.

June Goetze, junior in journalism, was put up and nominations were officially closed. Miss Goetze caused another stir when she, too, declined to run. Nominations were re-opened, and Helen Nickum was named.

Miss Nickum stood, following the supporting speech in her favor, and said, "I would like to run with Bob, but my other self says that I cannot." After a pause she announced, "I accept." Her nomination was unanimous.

Miss Goetze then received the senior representative nomination from a field of three candidates. Others were Herb Kariel and Eleanor Belgium.

Another attempt to nominate Conroy for office was made in the consideration of senior class officers. He declined, pointing out that he had already been a class officer for two years. Diana Dye also refused an offer of the No. 2 position. Don Latham and Eleanor Belgium received the nominations for senior class posts.

In the race for junior representative, three applicants withdrew. They were Susan Michele, Virginia Thompson, and Bob Davis. Art Johnson, sophomore in business, won the contest from Lauren McReynolds, who later received the junior class No. 1 nomination. Virginia Thompson was put up for junior class No. 2.

Anita Holmes, freshman in journalism, won the sophomore representative nomination from Don Davis.

Don Smith, freshman in journalism, was selected candidate for sophomore class president over Dave Cromwell by a four-point margin. In a run-off vote, Jackie Barbie was named his running mate. Other petitioners were Joanne Secoy and Dorothy Christiansen.

Steve Gann received unanimous nomination for yell king.
