

What, No Gatling Gun? 'Forest' Needs Artillery

Everything from toothpicks to submachine guns is needed by Jim Shaffer, graduate assistant, who is in charge of properties for the University theater's first production of the 1948-49 season, "The Petrified Forest."

Along with three pistols, the submachine guns, and one sawed off shotgun, Shaffer will need a life insurance policy—for the play's hero, Allan Squire, played by Lewis Vogler. The "small arsenal" is for the use of gangster Duke Mantee, Norman Weekly, and his mob, portrayed by Al Stockstad, Mervin Lovett, and George LaRoche.

Marble-topped Tables Scarce
Its not only the show that opens October 22 for a seven day run, but also the opening of a restaurant for Shaffer. Main stymie in furnishing the Black Mesa Bar-B-Que, scene of the play's action, are two marble-topped tables.

"Of the drug store type," Shaffer explained. "The story takes place in the early '30s, so no modern equipment can be used."

Lucky Strike White is 'Out'
No detail is being overlooked by Shaffer. Since "Lucky strike green has gone to war" and never returned, none of this brand can be used in the cigarette display.

Restaurant accessories, from salt and pepper shakers through a cash register and up to an ice box and stove, are required for the setting.

Easier properties to secure include a picture of General Pershing, needed for Jason, Charles Boice, a veteran of the first world war. Two copies of the Denver Post will be a favorite hand prop of Gramp, who "don't get to do much reading outside of the headlines."

Louise Clouston, as Gabby, the play's leading female character, will be serving the Black Mesa's "today's special"—hamburgers.

Fresh hamburgers, eight window panes, and several wine bottles will have to be secured for each performance of the play. The hamburgers are eaten, and the other props are destroyed in the final scene by gunfire.

Poll Reveals

committee, smugly announced that she had no worries.

"I'm gonna make my own," she said. "I have a friend in the print shop at state (one of the type lice) who'll print up a batch and I'll sell 'em at double price to red-headed people with freckles."

4000 Tickets Necessary
Walt Freauff, newly elected president of the United Students Association, considers the ticket situation "Outrageous." "We should have at least 4000 tickets," he exclaimed. His solution to the distribution problem consists of a lottery, proportionately allotting a percentage of the ducats to each class.
