

UO Assemblies Open Monday

The University of Oregon assembly series, sponsored by the University assembly committee, opens Monday, October 11 at 7:30 p.m., with a speech by Merryle Stanley Rukeyser.

Mr. Rukeyser, who is economic commentator for International News Service, author and one-time member of the teaching staff of Columbia university, will discuss "The Outlook for Better Living."

Uses Medical Example
In demonstrating that the disciplines of the American system spring from innate human needs, Mr. Rukeyser used the analogy of modern medicine. He said:

"An eminent New York specialist advised a female patient to learn to budget her expenditures of energy and to live within her physical resources.

"Keeping up with the Joneses' can be as destructive in physical well-being as in personal finances."

In applying these principles to the American economic system, Mr. Rukeyser further stated that a modern society, as ours, can function smoothly only through carefully thought out techniques and discipline.

The speaker has had extensive experience in the fields of economics, lecturing and writing, and has discussed the subject on numerous radio broadcasts and in magazine articles.

Dr. Dan E. Clark, chairman of the University assembly committee, announces that the speech will be delivered in McArthur court, with no charge to students of the University of Oregon.

Sunday Evening Service to Open UO Religious Evaluation Week

"Man's Predicament and God's Answer", first theme to be used during a Religious Evaluation Week, will be discussed beginning with the opening program Sunday night until Thursday, the closing day of the week.

Other new inaugurations are the morning worship services open to all from 7:15 to 7:45 daily in Gerlinger hall. They will be led by guest speakers. Co-chairmen Warren Webster and Dave Seaman hope these services will develop into a University chapel, a subject which has been brought up in past years.

On the agenda for Sunday night's program at 8 p.m. in McArthur court are the Eugene Gleemen, Wesley players and Dr. J. Renwick McCullough, pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Tacoma, Washington. Dr. McCullough will speak on "Religion; Its Verities and Values".

A reception will be held after the production Sunday evening open to any interested person.

Students, faculty members and residents unable to attend the program Sunday will have an opportunity to hear it over radio station KASH.

This year the committee has decided to bring fewer speakers and hold more sessions, said Webster. In this way, he added, these prominent men will have more of a chance to put their ideas across.

Noon forums in the John Straub dining hall will be held, led by Reverend John Schroeder from Linfield college. Classroom appearances of the eight religious authorities are also being arranged, as well as informal discussion periods and firesides in living organizations during evenings.

RUSHEES TO MEET

All girls wishing to participate in open rushing are to meet in the office of Golda P. Wickham, Director of Women's Affairs, at 4 p.m. Friday. Open rushing will begin Monday, October 11.
