

Argentinian, Carlos Pesado, Likes Oregon 'Fine' Tells Travel, Differences Of Schools And People

Carlos Pesado lives in a second-floor room at the western end of Merrick hall. When the window is open he can hear the chaos of notes from the music practice huts. On his bed is a blanket with a lemon-colored "C" in the middle; out in Oregon atmosphere, Carlos is thinking of the town of San Juan in western Argentina. It was only last June that he boarded a plane for Oregon and college education. "I did not come on the boat—it would have been too slow. I flew up so that I'd be here in time for summer session."

Carlos knew almost no English when he arrived. "Back in San Juan I took high school English, the same that you might take Spanish. I learned to say 'this is a bed' and 'here is the chair,' but you can't converse with that kind of English."

"The people here are much the same as the people in Argentina. We think and talk about the same things. In comparing the friends I have here with the friends I have in Argentina, I can see very little difference. Of course, things like the climate and the kind of food differ, but it isn't hard to adjust to that."

Webfoot Influence

Carlos came to Oregon because of the influence of a Webfoot friend—"and I like it fine." He is majoring in business administration at the present time, although his chief interest is learning the English language. At the end of the 1948-49 year he will go to Michigan to continue his education.

Back at San Juan, Carlos was a chemistry major. "College is run on a different basis in Argentina. We have three oral examinations which take place in November, March, and July. A student can flunk the first two, but if he flunks the July examination—well!"

Students "free"

Another interesting practice in Argentine colleges is the students are in no way compelled to attend classes. A student may stay away all year with no damage to his grades—supposing, of course, that he keeps up on the reading and passes that crucial July test.

"Instead of living in fraternity and sorority houses, or in dorms, students generally live in private gony way much better."

Oregon Alumnus Gets Foreign Post

Melvin L. Alter, a former University student, has been appointed associate staff secretary of the secretariat general, office of the military government of the United States in Berlin, the army announced last week.

Alter, a transfer from Pacific university, was a student here in 1939-'40, majoring in business administration. He began work as field auditor for the Oregon tax commission in 1941 and later worked for the state department in Spain and the army department in Korea.

While in Spain in 1945, he was manager-catcher for the American baseball team in Madrid.

Alter's home is in Hillsboro.

British Debate Set October 25

Warren Miller and Jack Miller will speak for the affirmative of the question: Resolved, that the British Empire is decadent. The combined British Universities Debating team will argue the negative at a debate October 25 in the Music auditorium.

Warren Miller is a graduate assistant in political science and veteran of Symposium and intercollegiate speaking. He was ASUO vice-president last year, and president of USA, campus political party formed last Spring term.

Graduate Student

Jack Miller, a graduate student in education, is a former intercollegiate debater at Moorhead college, Kentucky.

The British debate is being sponsored jointly by the local chapter of Delta Sigma Rho, national forensic society; education activities, and the Symposium.

The members of the British team will participate in a discussion of international affairs in room 3 Fenton at 4 p.m. the same day.

Ducats for Seattle Game on Sale

Student tickets for the Washington football game in Seattle November 6 are now on sale at the athletic business office in Mac court, according to Howard Lemons, athletic business manager.

The tickets, of which there is only a limited number, will sell for $1.50. Only one ticket will be sold to each student. Each purchaser will be required to present the last ticket from his athletic ticket book when buying one of the ducats.

Beat List Revised

A revised beat list of Emerald reporters has been posted in the Emerald quonset. All reporters, whether or not they have yet written for the Emerald, have been asked by the news editors to check the list, as several changes have been made.

A meeting of reporters will be held at 6:45 Thursday evening.

Wesley House Discussions Set

"University of Life" series will continue at Wesley house this Sunday despite of the UO-USC game.

Three different discussion groups will meet at 6:30. Dr. C. E. Diebel of Eugene high school will lead the forum on science and religion. Mr. J. Spencer Carlson of the counseling service will lead a seminar on "Understanding Ourselves."

A former member of the national labor board and a Eugene attorney, David C. Shaw, will talk on the Taft-Hartley bill. Mr. Shaw is particularly well qualified to deal with his topic due to his experience with government-labor relations.

Foreign Policy Set As I.R.C. Subject

The United States foreign policy will be the discussion topic tonight at the International Relations club meeting set for 7:30 p.m. in Westminster house.

Plans for the annual conference of the Northwestern Federation of College International Relations clubs, to be held in Eugene December 3 and 4, will be considered at the meeting.

Committees, housing, program, and other features of the December convention must be organized, Glenn Morgan, president of the University IRC, stressed.

The meeting is open to all students interested in international affairs.

MedHonorary Meets

Asklepiads, men's pre-medical honorary, will meet Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in room 103 Deady. Prospective new members will be discussed.
