

Books Written By UO Grads On Display

Books written by Oregon graduates are now on display in the Circulation room of the Library. These books, gathered by Miss Rise, head circulation librarian, represent several departments and schools of the university.

Many Oregon graduates have become nationally known and recognized authors, including Robert Ormand Case and Victoria Case, co-authors of "We Call it Culture" and "Lost Mountain", Helen Herick, "Iood Remembers", and Earnest Haycox, "Canyon Passage." Also represented are Richard L. Nueberger, "Our Promised Land," Leon Greenup, "Revolution Before Breakfast", and Gwendolyn Lampshire Hayden, author of "Muslin Town."

Dr. Oscar O. Winther, class of '35 and now a member of the University of Washington faculty, wrote "Beyond the Garden Gate", the scene of which was laid in Eugene and at the University of Oregon.

One of the more interesting and unusual writers represented is the late Opal Whitley, who thought she was the daughter of an Indian prince, and had been adopted by the Whitley. Her book "Fairyland Around Us" has an introduction written by Ellery Sedgewick, who believed her "foster-child fantasy" when the Atlantic Monthly Press published it in 1920, but who later referred to this episode sheepishly as his "Opalescence."

Bound in sturdy woolen cloth is "Pioneer Woolen Mills in Oregon", written by Professor A. L. Lomax. Clare Lurlay Newverry, noted children's book illustrator is represented by a copy of "Pandora", and some original sketches. "Address Unknown" and "Until That Day", best sellers by Katherine Kressman Taylor are also on display.

The Library will be open until 1 p. m. today, and the browsing room will be open all morning for visitors.

Ambulance Ride for Rally Girl

Blond Marilyn Hillman, of the rally squad, had her first ambulance ride Saturday afternoon, but she hopes it will be her last. Marilyn jumped just once too often trying to give her all for alma mater and landed on the cinder track in a heap. A doctor, at the Eugene hospital, who was disappointed that she wasn't a football player, treated her for an acute sprain. She missed the last part of the game, but the cheerful doctor kept her posted on the progress of the game by running back and forth between the radio and the room where she was being treated. Marilyn will be able to "rally" for next week's game, but her jumping activities will be limited for three weeks. She hopes that the University will pay for her ambulance ride, which she said was "pretty fast." (Photo by Roy C. Williams.)

Ad Fraternity Meets In City

Today members and pledges of Alpha Delta Sigma will enjoy a luncheon given by the Oregon Ad club at the Multnomah hotel in Portland.

The purpose of the gathering is to present the annual Mac Wilkins memorial award to the person or persons who display the outstanding advertising campaign of the year. Mac Wilkins, father of Dick Wilkins, founded the award two years ago to promote better advertising on the Pacific coast.

Those planning to attend are Bill Barnum, Earl Walters, Lyle Laws, Carl Miller, Jim Yarborough, Steve Gann, John Joachims, Al Ruedy, Sam Plunkett, Larry Baer, Cork Mobley, Bill Plummer, and Tom McLoughlin.
