

Law Students Present 'Johnson vs. Sharpe' In Mock Trial Friday

A mock trial trying the case of Johnson vs. Sharpe will be held Friday night, November 12, at 7:15 p. m. in Fenton Hall, Room 3. The "attorneys" representing Johnson (the respondent) will be John O'Kief and Curtis Cutsforth; those representing Sharpe (the appellant) will be Robert Myers, Thomas Brownhill, and Sidney Nicholson. All are second year law students.

The competition of these mock trials started last year. First and second year students participate. They are given a set of facts which look like a record they would have to argue before a supreme court of Oregon. — a hypothetical case in the mythical state of Hollis in Fenton county, described as being in the Pacific Northwest, being bounded by one Pacific Ocean, Oregon, Washington and California.

Last year there were two sets of arguments, one presented winter term, the winners of which struction company, and for two of those years I have called our mutual apartment house my home. And I have admired you from my window daily."

Miss Stevens fidgeted. They were driving down a dark street. "I hardly believed your jail story," she answered, trying to keep strained tones of dislike and apprehension out of her voice. She could think of nothing to say to him. He was probably illiterate, she thought, so they couldn't discuss books.

"Miss Stevens, that door doesn't catch tightly. I wouldn't lean against it if I were you. Why don't you move closer this way." Chuck's mouth twitched as he said this, but he maintained a gravely chivalrous air.

Miss Stevens bugged at least a quarter of an inch.

"No, I've never been in prison," he said, "but from the ages of ten to eighteen, I was in reform school. They put me away for stealing bread at the point of a gun for my starving mother. Don't you think that was unjust, Miss Stevens? You must. You look like you have a woman's tender heart."

Chuck looked doubtfully at Miss Stevens when he said this. He reached across the gap between them and put his hand on her knee.

"Don't!" She pulled away with something between a violent squirm and a jerk.

"Watch it! Remember that car door," he said replacing his hand on her leg.

Then, with a voice that was husky with restrained laughter, Chuck said, "I've always wanted to abduct you, Miss Stevens. At last I have an opportunity."

He swerved the car around a corner, and drove in the opposite direction from the apartment house.

Miss Stevens dug furiously in her pocket.

"What are you looking for, Tillie dear?"

"I have a gun," she said desperately in a small, breathless voice.

"Let me see it," he said with a smile.

She pulled it out and pointed it at him. Her hand shook violently.

"Put it away!" he said in forced, calm voice. "Can't you see that I'm trying to be funny?"

"And I'm going to shoot you!"

went on to the semi-final argument spring term. The winners of it are now in this fall's final mock trial.

In the case of Johnson vs. Sharpe, Johnson is a Negro who goes to Sharpe to buy a piece of land. Sharpe refuses to sell it to him because Johnson is a Negro. Johnson gets a man named Abbott to act as his agent unbeknown to Sharpe in buying the land. Abbott goes to a man named Cooley who is an agent of Sharpe's for selling land. Abbott and Cooley enter into a contract whereby Cooley as Sharpe's representative agrees to sell the land to Abbott. Johnson demands a deed from Sharpe, and Sharpe refuses it. Johnson brings action for specific performance in the circuit court of Fenton county. The circuit court issues a degree of specific performance. Sharpe is appealing from this decision.

Attending the mock trial will be Chief Justice Hall S. Lusk of the Supreme Court of Oregon; Judge George R. Duncan from the circuit court of Marion county; and Judge Dal King from the circuit Court of Coos County.

The public is cordially invited to attend the trial which is the principal function the law school gives for the public.

A set of books, "Oregon Laws Annotated," valued at over $100, will be given the winning team by the Portland law firm of Koerner, Young, Swett and McCullough.

Her voice rose hysterically. She heard nothing he said.

Frightened, he grabbed at her arm, and she jerked. The pistol went off.

And so Miss Tillie Stevens lay dead in the bushes where Chuck in his alarm had dragged her. And Chuck was in their mutual apartment house packing to leave the city. They'd never believe him, for she had seemed such a defenseless thing.

Oregana Sales Resumed Today

Oregana orders will be taken in the Co-op today, Wednesday, and Thursday. Sales were resumed, contrary to earlier plans, because 100 books were sold in the Co-op last week, according to Olga Yevitch, business manager.

Co-op sales are arranged especially for off-campus students, but orders will be taken from anyone, Miss Yevitch said.

Partial payments of $3 will be accepted on the book through this week only. The balance of $3 will be payable before January 15.

The business manager said names of houses entitled to free copies of the 1949 Oregana will be announced later this week. Ninety per cent of the residents of these houses ordered the yearbooks which will be distributed in the spring.

Orders for the books will be taken in living organizations through the late sales campaign which ends this week.

Sales in the houses have been directed by Don Hagedorn, circulation manager and the following members of the business staff: Bob Ruan, Kay Kuckenber, Sally Ford, Jean Smith, Ron Stevens, Ken Olson, Tom Mitchell, Beverly Elrey, and June Fitzgibons.

Rusty Mayer, assisted by Helen Sherman, has been handling promotion for the campaign.

guards, Jon Baker and Rod Franz, will be back."

Reminded that UCLA Coach Bert LaBrucherie had said California was as strong as Northwestern, Waldorf said "no comment." Northwestern, which may be the Big Nine team in the Rose Bowl and possibly may meet California here, defeated UCLA this season, 19-0.

Howard Greer, Washington State advance man, said "we do not expect to beat California but we think we will give the Bears their toughest contest of the season. We were disappointed in the 26-26 tie with Oregon State last week. All of the players felt they could score on Oregon State at will and that they should have won."

PE Meeting

Men's Physical Education club will meet tonight at 7:30 at the PE building. Movies of the Oregon-Stanford game will be shown after plans for the girls' PE club open house have been formulated.
