

University Student Injured

Fred Whitlege, a UO student, and Robert James, Eugene, were injured yesterday morning when their cars collided at Fifteenth and Villard. Whitlege was driving the car at left.

 in the face of the poor physical properties in use at present.
 But a ray of sunshine is beginning to break through the overcast. Far-sighted University officials, realizing the need for men and women who see the full potentialities of radio as a medium of communication, have already set in motion plans for achieving this goal.

As a result a new and improved physical plant is in the process of construction. All that hammering and banging over at Villard hall is the outward sign of the better things to come. When the last nail has been driven and the last scaffold taken down old Villard will be ready to assume new responsibilities. Old grads visiting the campus will still point with pride to that rough exterior, probably little realizing the changes that have taken place inside.

Studios constructed as individual islands and mounted on thick cork buffers will reduce noise and vibrations during broadcasting. Fully equipped engineering booths will house vigilant technicians. Practice rooms for running through script material will be available. These and many other refinements will help smooth the rough edges off student productions.

All these things are still in the future, but in the foreseeable future. Before too long scenes like this will be a frequent occurrence:

The producer points to an announcer as the flickering indicator changes from "Stand By" to "On the Air." A deep resonant voice proclaims, "The University of Oregon presents—" and better radio will be on the way. Not only for the University, but for the country at large. For qualified personnel will mean the difference between good radio and bad.

The possibilities of radio remain practically untapped. If more such plans are put into effect they will not long remain so.

Police drove pickets away from the entrance to the New York Stock Exchange, thus teaching them not to trifle with the money changers.

SDX Plans Meeting Tonight at 7 in Side

An important meeting of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalism honorary, will be held tonight at 7 p.m. in the upstairs room at the Side, SDX President Don McNeil announced Tuesday.

Discussion of future members will be heard at this time. In addition, members will be asked to endorse the checks earned election night.
