

Dick Rayburn Cast in 'School for Scandal'

The world of make-believe is nothing new for Dick Rayburn, junior in speech, who will appear in the University Theatre presentation of "School for Scandal," starting December 3. He has roles in five University productions, and has just been initiated into National Collegiate Players.

Perhaps the "heaviest" role that Dick has played was that of Michael James in "Playboy of the Western World."

"To make me look solid," he confided, "I had to wear three thick cotton pads with fourteen yards of muslin wrapped around them. It was very difficult to breathe, and I had to say lines, too."

But overcoming difficulties is new for this veteran thespian. After his experiences on tour with "Dover Road" last year, Dick will be prepared for anything, when School for Scandal hits the road in January. "When we played Junction City," he reminisced, "we had curtain trouble. It would close, all right, but would immediately jerk about a third of the way open again. It required split-second timing to get off the stage without being seen."

School for Scandal was written in the 18th century and has been acclaimed by every type of audience since then. The stage settings and costumes for the production are a work of art, but the lines are especially difficult to memorize, because of the unusual wording.

"The play is a sort of satire," Dick commented. "It is a brisk, light comedy of situation." He is cast in the role of Joseph Surface, a smug, conceited hypocrite, and the villain of the play.

"School for Scandal," under the direction of Mrs. Ottilie T. Seybolt, opens a one-week run on December 3.

Mueller: X-ray to Alter Future?

Descendants of many generations hence may be born with permanent hereditary deficiencies and ailments brought about by present X-ray treatments of certain diseases, Dr. H. J. Muller, Nobel prize winner in medicine, told students last night at Chapman hall.

On a tour covering a number of colleges and universities in the United States, Dr. Muller presented the results of important investigations he has been making.

He explained that the damage to be expected from the X-ray treatments is of the same kind as that wrought by radiation from an atom-bomb explosion, though not in the same degree, and referred to high frequency radiation impinging on the reproductive tissues as the only outside influence found this far which affects heredity to any great degree.

Hereditary changes—almost always unfavorable ones—are produced either by affecting individual genes or by breaking apart whole chromosomes, the fragments of which may subsequently reunite in ways that are not to the advantage of later generations, he said.

Dr. Muller is a professor of zoology at Indiana university. He spoke under the auspices of Sigma Xi, national scientific research society.
