Registration Still Lags; Must Complete Steps by Saturday

Registration had a noted increase Thursday, according to Assistant Registrar J. D. Kline. However, a large number of students have not yet completed registration.

All students with registration material should make attempts to complete registration by noon Saturday, December 4. Unless great numbers register this week, many students will be forced to register late since it will be impossible for the cashier to accommodate all the remaining students on registration day, January 3. Late fees will be imposed upon registrants starting January 4.

This is $1 per day, up to a maximum of $5.

Dull Will Air Views On Chinese Situation

The present situation in China will be explained by Professor Paul S. Dull this afternoon at 4 in an interview presented by the campus radio studios on KOAC.

Professor Dull, specialist in for Sastern studies in the political science department, will be interviewed by Chuck Hucka, senior speech student.

The interview is part of the "University Hour," presentation of the radio studios.

Cotton Bowl Ticket Reservations Today

The athletic ticket office has announced that students have from December 3-18 to apply for Cotton Bowl tickets.

Tickets, which cost $4.80 must be ordered at the ticket office. They will be later sent to the residences of students. Each student is entitled to two tickets.

Men's Fall Rushing To Close Tuesday

Men's fall term rushing and pledging closes Tuesday, December 7, to re-open during the first weeks of next term.

Men pledged before October 16 will be eligible for winter term initiation. Houses must petition the Interfraternity Council for permission to initiate men pledged after October 16.

Large Chorus And Orchestra In Performance

Presentation Will Be Held Sunday Night In McArthur Court

A production of tremendous size and scope—Handel's oratorio "The Messiah"—will be presented in McArthur court at 8 Sunday evening under the direction of Dean Theodore Kratt of the music school.

Dean Kratt will direct the myriad voices of choral union and the orchestra through a program as varied and complex as is possible to present in one evening.

"The Messiah" is a traditional Christmas work, having in its passages part of the spirit and elation of the holiday season. Included in the work is the "Hallelujah Chorus," during which the audience usually stands.

Arrangements for the production are under the direction of the University religious council, with Lou Weston as general chairman.

There will be no admission charge for the event.

Sunday night's presentation will include a number of soloists who are being given special training by the music school. However, the choral union at large consists of University students who were enrolled with no other requirement than a willingness to sing.

Dean Kratt last presented the oratorio in 1941, when he led a 600-voice chorus. A choral production of such scope has not been presented on the Eugene campus since then.

Sponsored by both the religious council and the music school, "The Messiah" has been in planning process for approximately a year. Choral union rehearsals began this fall, continuing throughout the term.

"Everyone should take his opportunity of seeing the oratorio," states Miss Weston. "There is a possibility that it will not be produced again on the campus for several years. Students will be impressed not only by the music itself but by the size of the production."

Interviewer Shows Gals Haven't Upturned Nose

By HAL COLEMAN

Are Oregon's co-eds as snooty as the recent deluge of letters to the Emerald indicates?

I didn't think so and set out with my own method of finding out. The plan was to take off across the campus greeting every female I met and noting her reactions. I had a sneaking hunch that gals would try to be friendly if given half a chance and if you had cause for complaint it was probably your own darned fault.

I figure that if they'll speak to me they'll speak to anybody and since none of the subjects knew they were being tested I consider the poll completely valid.

Altogether I encountered 37 women and didn't find a single snob. Here's what happened:

The first girl I spied was a redhead coming out of Friendly hall. This seemed like an ideal setting so I caught her eye and, sauntering up like a long-lost brother, let loose with a casual hello. She turned out to be my sister so I discounted her. In my survey, as in most contests, relatives can't participate. (Besides, she snubbed me.)

I counted the next greeting double, however. The two smooth-looking blondes hesitated a moment after my recognition, looked at each other questioningly, and then smiled. (Now that I think about it they might have been laughing.)

The first answered with a sugary "Hellooo" and the other, apparently not wanting to be outdone, gushed, "Well, helloooo there." I looked back after I had gone a few steps past them and our eyes met. I smiled sheepishly and pretended to be looking for something I had dropped.

This was working out almost too well so I decided to have a little fun. The next co-ed coming down the sidewalk was cute as a bug's ear so I changed my salutation slightly.

"Yi!" says I.

Without looking up she muttered something that sounded like "Hellno." After that I tried "Pie," "Sigh," "Die," "Mellow," "Yellow," and "Jello" without a failure.

By the time I was halfway across the quad I had a page and a half of entries in my scorebook. I was intent on chalking up my latest success when I felt a hand on my arm. I looked up and saw a trim little brunette in a huge coat smiling at me.

"What's the matter, aren't ya gonna speak to me?" she asked in a low, sexy voice.

I did a retake on her and tried to figure out where in heck I could have met her. She didn't even look familiar, Party? Rally? Maybe in some class? She couldn't be mistaking me for someone else—nobody else in the world looks like me!

"And after you gave me that line at dessert about being sure to say hello to you," she purred. "If you aren't nicer I'm liable not to go to the party with you."

"Gee, I'm sorry, Honey," I gulped, trying to look unconcerned, "I'm late to class—I'll call you."

Right there the survey ended. As soon as I find out who the doll is my tabulations will be complete.
