

'School for Scandal' Scores Hit on First Night Show

A highly different and entertaining comedy was presented to the opening night audience of "School for Scandal," last night at Guild theater.

Direction by Mrs. Otilie T. Seybolt, with Mary Ellen McKay as student assistant, was evidenced in the many details and extra touches in the eighteenth-century comedy of manners. The characters were particularly well cast, with the three gossipers played by Sally Nicol, Allen West, and Bob Cockburn, grabbing top honors for easy laughter.

In the straight roles (if any are to be termed straight in this character comedy) Cliff James adds another excellent job to his varied career as Sir Peter.

Beautiful Costumes

Nina Sue Fernimen's beauty is enhanced by the lovely period costumes and 17th century wig, and her performance as Lady Teazle is a delight to watch. Miss Fernimen handles the difficulties of the role with extraordinary ease, and clearly and precisely manages the development of the young life, from a coquettish society wife to a serious, sincere woman.

The plot of the play itself is a little confusing for twentieth-century audiences. The first part of the play is especially difficult to follow, as a large number of characters are introduced in a short time.

Special mention must go to the famous "screen scene," which stood out as the funniest of a number of good scenes. It concerns the nervousness of Joseph when Sir Peter enters his house and admires a painted screen, which his wife is hiding behind in terror. Dick Rayburn as the studly Joseph, a type of role Rayburn is especially suited for, is highly funny in this scene with his mugging, and James is good and blustering as Sir Peter.

Provides Laughs

As the effeminate Benjamin Backbite, West must be credited with being a main factor in provoking laughs in the scenes in which he appears. It is unfortunate Mr. West drops out of character on occasion and cannot restrain himself

Ex-Student Faces Forgery Charge

Spencer Hanief former University student, has been arrested in Los Angeles and charged with forgery of four government subsistence checks. Hanief, 19, admitted forging endorsements to the four checks, totaling more than $300.

He came to Oregon from Beverly Hills in the winter of 1947. He dropped out of school because of low grades, according to his fraternity brothers.

Members also reported the four checks were made out to two men, thereby implying he had stolen the men's checks for two different months.

Hanief will be brought to Portland for federal court trial.
