

Jim McMullen Sings Senior Recital Tuesday

Oregana Progressing Nicely Reports Editor Trudy Chernis

Presenting his senior recital on January 25 will be James McMullen, baritone. The program will begin at 8 p.m. in the music school auditorium.

Accompanied by Helen McFetridge, Mr. McMullen will first be heard in "Ye Blustering Brethren," an aria from King Arthur by Purby Massenet. The program will continue with contemporary French selections by Polence.

He will conclude with an English language group including: "Sometimes" by Walter, Lord Randall by Cyril Scott, "Green River" by Carpenter, and Theodore Chandler's "I Rise When You Enter."

McMullen includes in his past experience the lead in last year's production of "The Beggar's Opera," soloist with both the University concert band and Choral union, and several appearances in music school concerts. He recently sang at the governor's inauguration and will co-star in "The Telephone," a one-act opera this spring.

Planning to continue with a professional career he will study voice after graduation and hopes to work into musical comedy and maybe, later, concert and opera.

"My first professional experience was singing in a Portland night club two summers ago," Jim stated. "I believe that if you're really interested in music professionally, the popular field is nothing to turn up your nose at. It is really needed for all-around musical experience."

"My, that's a lovely dress, too bad they didn't have your size."

Several sections of the 1949 Oregana, including the introduction and spring and fall activities, have been sent to the printers. Editor Trudy Chernis said staff members are now completing the football, executive council, and class officer pages.

A full-cover cover "to really portray Oregon" has been chosen again this year, she said. Three full-color inserts will be used in the 1949 yearbook.

Miss Chernis said the introductory section features the student union building and activities it will house.

Highlights of the book are a 16-page football section, pictures of the football banquet, the Cotton Bowl, special rallies, snow scenes, and the men and women's personality section.

All material for the completed Oregana will be sent to the printers at the end of this term, the editor said. Students will receive the books "sometime in May."

A major change in this year's Oregana places the living organizations in the front half of the book instead of the back. House presidents will have their pictures included in the group this year.

Every living organization page will include a picture of some activity in the house, along with a sketch of the building done by Art Editor Ed Caudero and his staff.

Miss Chernis emphasized that no more individual pictures for the living organization section will be taken.

Approximately 4000 Oreganas have been ordered. The books can still be purchased according to Olga Yevtich, business manager.
