

Survey Shows College Costs Extremely High

The average college student, in what is described as a fairly characteristic college from a financial standpoint, spends $103 each month while he is attending school.

This information comes from a survey reported in a recent issue of "Editor and Publisher," journalism publication. The "typical" school is San Jose (California) State college, where the 7000 students spend an aggregate of $6,500,000 in a nine-month period.

According to the article, San Jose coeds spend $103,000 yearly to purchase four or five sweaters each.

Other monthly expenditures of the students at that institution include $5,427 for flowers, $17,855 for tobacco, and $20,500 for drugs (including cosmetics and personal items).

Average per student investment in movies each month is 30 cents.

The entire student population of San Jose State spends $21,161 monthly for confections and $25,592 for cleaning and pressing.

Discussing advertising prospects in college newspapers, the article reports that only 41 college dailies exist in the nation. The "average" daily is in tabloid form (although several publish eight-column papers) publishing not less than four but often six or eight pages. Average total operational cost is $37,300 annually.

Some dailies report spending as much as $80,000 yearly in production costs.

The "average" college daily, the article states, has a circulation of 6,400, which is 62 per cent of the total enrollment at its respective institution.

The article reports (at one institution, anyway) that nearly all students read the campus daily while only approximately a quarter of them read the professional morning and evening papers.
