Good Weather Speeds Building Construction

Oregon's building program, accelerated by improved weather conditions, advanced greatly during vacation week.

Most important was the final preparations of the first and second floors of Villard hall for speech classes. Offices of the speech department and faculty members of the speech division have moved to Villard, and spring term classes began yesterday in the newly renovated building.

In addition, progress has been made in the construction of the Villard theater wing. Most of the exterior concrete of the building has been poured, and workmen will begin on the interior, which will house Oregon's theater when completed.

On the southern edge of the campus, the new music building is taking shape. At the present time, the brick facade is being laid. The interior is as yet in more rudimentary stages of construction.

The new music building will include classrooms, offices, and practice rooms, which will alleviate the crowded conditions of the music school. Builders have found the wet, cold weather of the past months a great obstacle to their construction schedule.

UC's student union building continues to grow from the block of building material on the block adjacent to University and Thirteenth streets. Bricklaying will begin in the immediate future on the northern wing of the building, although the rest of the restructure is not so far advanced.

Bricklaying on the new women's dormitory has been in progress for several days. The dormitory will probably be completed some time next fall or winter.
