

Burgess Poetry Award Entries Due by May 2

Attempting to get student poetry out of those ivory towers, the Julia Burgess upper division award of $25 and the Walter Evans Kidd lower division award of $15 are being offered for the best poetry submitted before May 2, 1949.

The contests are open to all regularly enrolled students of the University. Entries may be left with the secretary of the English department before the final date.

Subject matter is unrestricted, but if short lyrics are submitted as a unit, not more than five or less than three should be entered.

Material should be typed in triplicate and enclosed in a manila envelope marked on the outside with titles of the entries and for which award they are intended. The author's name should be enclosed separately in a sealed envelope together with the titles of poems submitted.

FORMER PRESIDENT Hoover, using a hearing aid, testifies before the senate armed services committee. He said the armed services apparently are "padding" their requests to congress for money. Hoover was called as a witness because he has headed a commission which has put in months of study on possible improvements in the government's organization. (AP Wirephoto)

Hunter College Sends Lecture Series Speaker

The philosophy upon which the contemporary Russian regime rests will be examined by John Somerville, professor of philosophy at Hunter College, New York, and now visiting instructor at Stanford University, in the second of the current University Lecture Series. Prof. Somerville will speak at 8:00 Thursday in room 208, Chapman hall.

In discussing "Philosophy and Its Place Today," Somerville has an authoritative background on which to rely. A teacher of philosophy since 1928, he spent two years abroad investigating trends in European thought as a Cutting Traveling Fellow of Columbia University.

As a member of UNESCO, Somerville participated in that organization's projects on Human Rights, Interrelations of Contemporary Ideological Conflicts. He was also an American member of the International Congresses of Philosophy at Paris, Copenhagen, Harvard, and Amsterdam.

Somerville's books, which have been translated into several languages, include Methodology in Social Science and Soviet Philosophy: A study of Theory and Practice, and, with John Dewey, Bertrand Russell, and others, Twentieth Century Philosophy.

This year's board has instituted a pension system for the store's permanent employees. Bill Green, board secretary, reported that the pension will provide for retirement at 65 on a comfortable pension.

Don Dole, outgoing board president, explained that last year's method of patronage refund, patterned after that of the Harvard university cooperative store, was found to be unsatisfactory because of the expense involved in tabulations at the end of the year. The board this year decided to revert to the original plan of saving cash register slips until the close of the school year.

A short history of the Co-op was also presented at the meeting. Incorporated in 1920, it has been student-owned and operated since then. Previously the Co-op operated at the corner of 13th and Kincaid, present location of the Westgate Shoppe, until liquidated one year by the University in order to pay off the football coach, according to Manager Henson.
