Change Starts Fall Term

tion courses has been nearer the minimum in many cases. Normally, however, students have carried more than the specified number of 48 hours.

"The new requirements do not apply to this year's seniors not to those who will graduate in June, 1950. They will apply, however, to all students graduating subsequent to June 1950 and to all transfers after June of this year.

"During the period of transition there will doubtless be a few cases which will have to be adjusted individually in order to avoid unfair hardship to the student. Such cases will receive reasonable consideration."

Odds Still Against

alarmed by the 188 per cent drop suffered by the journalism school. The light dawns when one realizes that freshman and sophomore students leaning toward newspaper and magazine careers are now classified as liberal arts students, rather than as journalism majors as they were last year.

Largest increase, 67 percent, is shown in the field of general studies. Frankly puzzled by this obscure term, we called the registrar's office for a definition.

General studies, we learned, is a major for graduate students only which gives them a chance to obtain a rounded education in several fields rather than specializing in one field only. It offers Master of Science and Master of Arts degrees.

Field Wide Open

In spite of this great percentage increase, the registrar isn't worried about overcrowding in the field. It still claims only eight students.

Back to the table of figures, we discovered that the school of education registered a decrease of 28 per cent; the law school one of 16 per cent, and the art school one of five-tenths of one per cent.

On the credit side are the college of liberal arts with a 16 per cent rise; business administration, 6 per cent; health and PE, 4 per cent; music, 3 per cent.

Auditors Have Day

Thirty-seven per cent more auditors have registered this spring term than last year. The only answer we could find for this one was that perhaps this year's beautiful weather has convinced more people that they don't want a grade for their spring term's work.

Ending the lengthy report is the cheerful news that new students are still coming to Oregon—two per cent more of them than during spring term last year. A total of 122 new matriculates not registered before—91 men and 31 women—have added their names to University rolls.

For Art's Sake

Just a matter of professional pride which Georgia Sothern (left) and Joann Collier, dancers at the Bradley restaurant, New York, decided to settle with a public fight. The New York Daily News said the battle followed "a furious temperamental explosion over the nuances of their art, including falsies, act-stealing and who gets the closing spot." (AP Wirephoto)

Lawyers Choose Avery Combs Queen of Law School Weekend

Royalty for Law School Weekend, annual competitor of Junior Weekend, was chosen Thursday, according to word received from Fenton hall. Her royal highness is Queen Avery Combs, third-year law student who was elected on a platform of "Purity and Maturity," and will reign April 30.

Princesses are "those glorious red heads," Richard and Robert Carney. They were virtually unopposed, running on the ticket of "Which twin has the phoni?" Three flower girls, Jack Hill, Wally Martin and William Rooney, complete the court.

The talents of Jack Hill, third-year student, could not be denied; therefore a position was created so that he might be utilized this year. Formerly only second and first-year students were eligible for the honor.

Wally Martin, second-year student, who demonstrated remarkable "capacity" during last year's festivities, thus won a position in the hall of fame. William Rooney blushingly fell heir to the first-year spot when seized with a sudden attack of foot and mouth disease during nomination speeches.
