Defendant Wins First of Moot Trials

A verdict in favor of the defendant in the case of Johnson vs. Jones was returned by the jury last night in the initial trial of a series of seven moot trials conducted by the law school.

The case arose out of a mythical automobile collision March 8 involving a car driven by Harold Johnson and one driven by Stanley Jones, both University of Oregon law students. The accidents occurred at the intersection of 19th avenue east and Hilyard street.

Both cars were traveling east on 19th avenue. Johnson stopped his car at the intersection near the center of the street and Jones attempted to pass to the right of the Johnson car, intending to turn right on Hilyard street.

The collision occurred when Johnson also turned right.

Johnson testified that he suffered extensive injuries which hospitalized him for 15 days. Among other injuries, he said, he received a serious gash on his left arm requiring 35 stitches.

The courtroom became rather tense when Defense Attorney Jack Hoffman asked the plaintiff to remove his coat and reveal the injury. Johnson did so and showed the bandage on his arm. Hoffman then asked him to remove the bandage on his arm but the objection by the plaintiff counsel was sustained.

Negligence was charged by both the plaintiff and the defendant.

The plaintiff contended that the defendant was negligent through his failure to observe children playing nearby and his excessive speed.

The plaintiff was negligent, the defense counsel stated, by failing to signal for the turn, by being too far out in the center of the street for a right turn, and by failing to look back for another car.

The jury decision indicated both parties were negligent and no damages were awarded to either. The jury deliberated about 20 minutes before announcing the verdict.

Attorneys for the plaintiff were Avery Combs, Edward Eismann and Donald Krause, and for the defense Edward Harms and Jack Hoffman. Orlando Hollis, dean of the law school was judge.

Bailiff-notary was Douglas Hay; clerk was Ralph Johnson and reporter-sheriff was Mrs. Marilyn Sturgis.

Witnesses for the plaintiff were Frank Bosch, Robert McDonald and Johnson. Witnesses for the defendant were Manville Heisel, Clifford Ouellette and Jones.

Physics Instructor Will Attend Oakridge Conference In June

Lyman A. Webb, instructor in physics, will travel to Oakridge, Tenn., to attend a symposium on scintillation counters June 3 and 4. During the last two years University physics staff members have been working on the development of scintillating counters for the study of various kinds of radiation in the atmosphere.

The University instructor will attend the meeting at the request of Dr. Marcus D. O'Day, director of the air force navigational laboratory.

These counters enable workers to determine the number of radioactive particles contained in a substance. The air force presented the University with the contract for this work.

The only educational institution in the Northwest with an air force contract of this type, the University is provided with $30,000 a year to cover research expenses.

Only members of the physics staff, under the direction of A. E. Caswell, physics department head, are working on the project. No undergraduates have worked with the counters.

Irene Long, freshman in business administration was presented a plaque honoring her as the outstanding freshman business student.

Staff Assembles Ore-Nter Copy

Copy for the new Ore-Nter is at present being assembled by Co-editors Olga Yevtich and Trudi Chernis.

Most of the copy is being written by members of Theta Sig, women's journalism honorary. Bill Howlett, junior in journalism, is doing the art work for the publication.

"We will welcome any suggestions for material to be included in the Ore-Nter," said Miss Yevtich. "Upper classmen might be particularly helpful in remembering things that every freshman should know."

According to Miss Yevtich, several campus organizations have agreed to help finance the Ore-Nter, with other agreements pending.

And then there is the one about the sorority president who sent a note to the neighboring fraternity house saying, "Your nightly classes in anatomy are not appreciated."

The fraternity president quickly returned the note with the notation on the back, "Course not compulsory."
