

DUCK TRACKS

By DON FAIR
Emerald Sports Writer

Dink Templeton, self-appointed Bay area sports authority and Stanford track coach from 1921-39, has come up with another startling prediction. Last week, Templeton told Pappy Waldorf, California grid coach, that the Palo Alto second eleven could beat the Golden Bears even if they had Jackie Jensen. He also prophesied that the Stanford third string would lick California without Jensen.

Those are pretty strong words even when they come from such a man as Templeton. Apparently he is out drum-beating for the Indians, as have most of the Frisco sports writers in the past two years. Such statements certainly put the Indian football coach, Marchie Schwartz, on the spot, aside from the fact that he reportedly had to have a title-contender next fall or go job-hunting.

Jensen, former fair-haired boy of the Berkely campus and now playing the outfield with Oakland of the Pacific Coast league, is having some tough hurdles to overcome in the professional sport. Last Friday night, for instance, he ran in about 10 yards for a fly ball only to watch it sail over the fence for a home run.

The following day, Jensen galloped in after another outfield drive, and suddenly stopped only to have the ball fall in front of him for a single. Later in the game he was picked off third base. In the following contest he was charged with an error.

Got Big Bonus Despite .258 Average

The Oaks played a healthy bonus to the "Golden Boy" when he signed despite Jensen's meager .258 batting average in CIBA league play. The mistakes he's already made in the hopped-up competition proves that the jump to triple-A ball is a big one for any college player, although he'll undoubtedly iron out the kinks with more experience.

The Oregon baseball nine lost its first player to the professional ranks last week when outfielder Johnny Kovenz signed with the Cleveland Indians. He is slated to be shipped to Bakersfield, Cal., a class C loop. Kovenz's speed and good batting, .464 for the ND campaign, should stand in him in good stead in his new venture. At the time of his signing, he had one year of collegiate eligibility remaining.

Al Cohen, Webfoot shortstop, is almost certain to turn to the play-for-pay sport. He is supposed to have had offers from the Boston Braves, New York Giants, and San Francisco Seals, among others. Chances are that the hard-hitting shortpatcher will draw a nifty bonus from the team which he finally decides to sign with.

Other Duck Baseballers May Go Pro

Other Oregon diamond warriors who might turn to the pro style include Hal Zurcher, Dick Bartle, Walt Kirsch, Pat Wohl-ers, and Don Dibble. Of this group, only Kirsch and Dibble are seniors, which raises the question of baseball clubs moving into the college campuses to snag prospective candidates despite their year in school.

Professional football has been given a strict hands-off ruling on college athletes, unless the player has completed his eligibility. But the monied baseball sport still has free-will to come in at any time to grab off a ripe plum, as in the cases of Kovenz and Jensen. Seems that the two sports should get together and strike up some uniformity in the procedures, at least.

The Portland alumni group has advised that the Webfoots "unofficially have" three-fourths of the Compton J. C. football backfield—namely Billy Fell, Jack Gibilisco, and Bobby Moore. The fourth member of the backfield for the national junior college champs, Hugh McElhenny, is now at Washington.

Bay area sports columnists have also acknowledged this fact, despite reputed attempts to get Fell to USC. Tommy Harmon, the Michigan All-American, was also said to have been thwarted in his attempt to get Gibilisco to go to the Ann Arbor institution.

Rasmussen Views Intrasquad Game

Marv Rasmussen, former Oregon basketball player who was seriously injured in an auto collision during spring vacation, was in Eugene Saturday to view the intra-squad football game. Rasmussen is still on crutches, but definitely in good spirits and plans to come back to his schooling at Oregon next fall.

No more word has been heard recently about the reported return of Ted Meland to the University for summer session and next fall to play for the Duck gridgers. Latest rumor is that the rock-ribbed guard is in Peru, South America, working at his father-in-law's fish cannery.

L. H. Gregory, sporting editor of THE OREGONIAN, paid Jim Aiken a fine tribute in his, the major address at the football clinic banquet last Friday night. Greg, in briefing the highlights of Northwest football from 1920 to the present, cited Aiken as one of the "men" in the conference as distinct from the "boys" in his rating of the coaches to come out of this area.
