'Health Bill Will be Passed,' Morse Says

Senator Wayne Morse mended political fences in a speech last night before some 400 persons at Woodrow Wilson junior high.

Morse is a former dean of the University law school, elected to the senate in 1944. He faces reelection in 1950.

The senator officially announced his candidacy for reelection.

The senator said that it is his duty to represent the state on the basis of facts as he sees them. "It is my duty," Morse declared, "to represent public opinion with regard to the fact. A senator represents his state for the entire nation."

It is the duty of the Republican party, according to Senator Morse, to make the capitalist system work for the benefit of the people. If the party refuses to do so it is doomed.

Morse believes that organized medicine is operating outside the framework of public opinion.

"Health legislation is going to be passed within the next decade," Morse stated.

He is opposed to having doctors as employees of the state, but believes that the socialized medicine bogie has been falsely used by the profession.

Morse pleaded with the medical profession to sit down and help prepare suitable legislation.

The senator believes that the overlapping, duplication of services, and jurisdictional disputes within the armed forces are costing millions.

"Real unification will not exist until the secretary of defense has the power to make decisions," Morse declared.

He stated that the Taft-Hartley act has created a "class consciousness and entered labor into partisan politics.

Morse is confident, that through bipartisan amendments to the Thomas labor bill, that good legislation can be secured.

Dr. N. H. Comish, professor of business administration, is faculty adviser for the local chapter.
