NEW YORK, Sept. 30 (UP)—The Boston Red Sox and Brooklyn Dodgers gained one-game leads in the torrid American and National League pennant races Friday, with only two games left to go.

The Red Sox did it the hard way, whipping the Washington Senators 11 to 9, as the Philadelphia Athletics upset the New York Yankees, 4 to 1. The Red Sox and Yankees were tied for the American League lead before the game.

Brooklyn did it the easy way, sitting on the sidelines as the cellar-dwelling Chicago Cubs dealt the St. Louis Cardinals a vital blow, 6 to 5.

Thus with only two games left for each contender in the 1949 race, the Red Sox could clinch the American League pennant by winning one of the two remaining games with the Yankees.

The Dodgers, who now need only one victory in order to gain at least a tie for the flag, faced the Philadelphia Phillies in their last two games, while the Cards played two games with the Cubs.

The possibility of a tie and an ensuing playoff in the American League was eliminated—except in the event of rain today or Sunday—since the two contenders meet one another, but the National League race could end in a tie if the Cards wipe out the one-game deficit during the last two days.

Boston was out-hit, 18 to 5, by the Senators in a weird game, but capitalized on 14 walks by five Washington pitchers and three errors by the Nats to take the game.

Even with the Senators' inept pitching and defense, the Red Sox had to call on Ellis Kinder, their 23-game winner, to put down a Washington uprising in the last two innings. Kinder came in to relieve Walt Masterson after Washington had scored twice in the eighth. Kinder doused the rally by striking out the side.

Dick Fowler's four-hit pitching and home runs by Sam Chapman and Ferris Fain gave the A's their victory over the Yankees.

After the Yankees had jumped off to a 1-to-0 lead in the first, Chapman tied the score with his four-base blast in the second. Then Fain connected with two men on in the third. Ed Lopat, the first of four New York pitchers, was the loser.

A two-run single by rookie Walt Serena in the fifth inning provided the Cubs with their margin of victory over the Cards. The setback was the third straight for the faltering Redbirds.

St. Louis hopped off to a 2-to-0 lead in the first, but the Cubs tied the score in the bottom half of the inning on homers by Roy Smalley and Hank Sauer. Max Lanier, the former Mexican League jumper, was knocked out of the box when the Cubs scored two more runs in the third and went ahead to stay. Lanier was the loser.

In the only other Major League game, Bob Feller beat Hal Newhouser as the Cleveland Indians

McArthur Court, Hayward Field Get Facelifting

By Stan Litt

Grid followers who were present at last Saturday's Idaho game probably noticed several features new to the Hayward Field layout. These new additions will make a trip to a Saturday's grid tussle both more comfortable and more enjoyable.

Among these new improvements is a new electric scoreboard which will literally better help to tell what the score is. Another addition to the football field is 4,064 new bleachers, which should come in handy in lieu of crowds such as witnessed the game last Saturday.

Not only are the fans attending the football games to be blessed with new accommodations, for the long suffering press has more elbow room up high above the green turf of Hayward Field. Also added for our convenience is a concessionary where hot stimulants may be obtained during October afternoons.

Over in McArthur court there were also some summer renovations taking place. Put in during the summer recess was a new, centralized equipment room for all sports and also a new hydrotherapy whirlpool tank to ease the aches and pains of all varsity sportsmen.

Visiting teams now have a redesigned dressing room that should make the mfeel right at home, at least until they get out on the field.

Upstairs, on the basketball floor, are some more new seats made possible by the new-type foldaway seats.

The new seats, over seven hundred of them, are also to be placed at the ends of the floor now that the baskets are suspended from the ceiling.
