

J' School Named Hustle-Bustle Startles Passers-by One of 38 in U.S. As Co-op Throws Party for Smithy

The University of Oregon School of Journalism is among 38 schools and departments accredited in 1949, according to the American Council on Education for Journalism.

The University school has been accredited in three specific phases of journalism—advertising management, only five schools in the country were recognized; news-editorial, recognized in 35 schools; and radio journalism, accredited in 13 schools.

Oregon's school of journalism has been an accredited department since the ACEJ first set up an official accrediting committee in 1946, but has been recognized as a class A school since 1920.

Passers-by might have been startled early last Friday morning. The Co-op was full of hustle before opening hours. It had all to do with "Smithy" and a party.

"Smithy"? He's Ralph Smith, next to oldest member of the Co-op staff. And the party—it was in celebration of his 72nd birthday and a way of thanking him for 16 years of service and friendship to the Co-op.

"Smithy" was with the Co-op association when it was just a small store down the street from its present location. And when it moved, he came right along with it. Only Mrs. Gerda Brown, wife of Associate Professor Eyer Brown of the School of Architecture, has been with the store longer, 22 years.

For his birthday, the staff gave him a gold watch. He looked at it for a moment, drew up his sleeve, and said, "Doesn't that look just dandy." There were also three cakes, coffee and candles.

"Smithy" has done all right by himself through the year. As he will quickly tell you, he has five married children and ten grandchildren.

Student Health Requests X-ray

Registration of new students will not be considered completed until the results of their chest X-rays have been turned in to the student health service, Betty Miller, secretary, said Monday.

The announcement pertains to the students whose chest X-rays were taken at the county courthouse by the mobile unit. Result cards are being mailed out this week. It is necessary that these be turned in to the Infirmary.

Miss Miller added also that students who were unable to have chest X-rays taken in the health service last Tuesday because of a breakdown in the X-ray machine should have it done this week.
