

The Cinemah Review of 'The Heiress'

enchancing woman who does her best to see that Miss de Havilland, a drab little heiress, finds love and happiness.

Clift, a fortune hunter, woos and almost wins the heiress by showing her affection which she had never before received from a man. But a suspicious father threatens to cut the inheritance, and Clift leaves the disillusioned girl after he learns she won't have nearly the money he had planned on getting.

The father dies, the girl receives her full inheritance, and several years after an unsuccessful venture in California, Clift comes back. But this time it is the heiress who decides to do the jilting.

While this story may sound rather depressing, the film is far from a discouraging tragedy. It is too full of life to be only dismal or only sad or only gay or only pleasant. It has everything—humor and despair, kindness and cruelty.

With a good story, a good cast to the point of having the maid played by Vanessa Brown and featured players including Selena Royal, and fine direction this picture could hardly miss.

It simply is thoroughly enjoyable.

'Thunder Rock' Cast To Begin Rehearsals

"Thunder Rock," Robert Ardrey's drama of a lonely lighthouse keeper who resurrects the dead to keep him company, goes into rehearsal this week, the second production of the University Theater 1949-50 season.

The three-act drama will be presented Feb. 3, 4, 8, 9, and 10.

In the role of the lighthouse keeper, Charleston, is Don Van Boskirk. Charleston finds that the staff of the lighthouse, played by Harold Smith and Bob Peterson, isn't companionable enough for him so he reaches into the past and brings to life in his own mind, the people who lost their lives in the sinking of a ship in Lake Michigan some years earlier.

It's only when Charleston finds that he is to leave his lighthouse, Thunder Rock, and return to the mainland, that the situation gets out of hand. The "resurrected" people want to go with him and only Captain Joshua, played by Ken Neal, realizes that this is not possible.

Supporting Van Boskirk in the production, directed by Ottilie T. Seybolt, professor of speech, are Bob Morton as Briggs, Faber DeChaine as Dr. Kurtz, Grace Hoffman as Melanie, Louise Clouston as Miss Kirby, Joan Landman as Anne Marie, and Don Doak as Cassidy.

William E. Schlosser, technical director, has completed a model of the set for the show and the scene and shop crews will begin construction soon. The three-act drama will make use of but one set, which will be the interior of the lighthouse.

Stage Production Needs Amazons

According to mythology, there was once a race of women who were masters of a land which might be called Amazonia.

These women were reported to have been very beautiful, very shapely and very tall, and had all the characteristics which modern day women want, perhaps should have.

The days of the Amazon women are long past, but for just a short while, the University Theater would like to recreate the scene in its production of "The Warrior's Husband."

There may be more beautiful, taller, and more shapely women on the campus than those who have shown up so far for "The Warrior's Husband" tryouts, but the University Theater has to be shown.

Last chance for roles in the production is 7:30 Thursday night, in room 104 Villard when Director Horace W. Robinson will make the final casting for the Amazon comedy.

Baldwin Back From Korea Trip

E. M. Baldwin, assistant professor of geology, has returned to the University from a five-month stay in Korea.

While in Korea, Dr. Baldwin studied coal fields and the problem of electric power. He is interested mainly in the economic recovery of Korea.

Coal fields had to be developed in order to have steam generating plants in the southern part of the country. When Korea was recently divided, power was shut off in the southern section. There is an abundance of electrical power in north Korea.

Dr. Baldwin reported that some factories are now producing, and that power out-put has risen, but not to the desired amount.

The work was done in connection with the economic cooperation administration, which has taken over from the military government in Korea.

Construction of the new science building is not expected to begin for several months.

The new course is under the direction of Mrs. W. H. Roecker, a former dance instructor here.

Classes will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. every Tuesday beginning Jan. 17. Registration will be completed at the first two class meetings, but students may pre-register at the General Extension Division offices in the old YMCA building. A $7 fee will be charged for 20 hours of instruction.
