

Propeller Club Attends Dinner

Members of the University Propeller Club attended a banquet meeting in the Crystal Room of the Benson Hotel, Portland, Wednesday night to discuss temporary shipping problems.

The club, a student "port" of an international shipping organization, met with members of the Portland Propeller Club, which sponsors the campus organization.

Guest speaker of the banquet was Kenneth Cochran, Portland club member. Other speakers were Don Smith, student port president, and Stanley Watt, head of the student port committee of the Portland club.

The University port of the club was chartered in 1937 principally for students in foreign trade, as a part of the international organization's interest in promoting the maritime industry, Smith explained.

About 20 members of the Portland Propeller Club are former students of A. L. Lomax, faculty advisor of the club.

Campus Malady Officially Spring Fever

Meteorologists and climatologists got their heads together and came up with an answer to a strange malady which kept classes fairly empty yesterday afternoon.

Student speculation varied as to its cause—one student thought it was 13 cups of coffee he drank.

But officially it's spring fever, James C. Stovall, professor of geography who teaches a climatology class, said that since Thursday was the first warm day of the year, it must be spring fever.
