

Renovation of Friendly, SU Completion Slated

Student Union completion and the renovation of Friendly Hall will highlight the campus building program as it moves into its spring schedule.

Mild weather gave a green light to full-scale work on the Student Union Building, now in the final stages of construction. Although the $2,000,000 building was to be completed by spring term, I. I. Wright, superintendent of the physical plant, said contractors don't expect to finish the job until sometime in May.

Overhaul Begins

Work on Friendly Hall began last week. A general overhaul, to last throughout the summer, is scheduled for the old structure. Carpenters have started out with construction of a firewall in the north wing saircase. Stairs will be widened to the wall and doors put on the landing.

Redecoration will also include asphalt tile on the floors, new windows and doors, replastering, and new wiring.

Asphalt Tile Laid

More than 13,000 square feet of asphalt tile have been laid during the last month on floors in Commerce, Fenton, and the architecture annex. About 5,000 feet more are to be added to basement corridors and classrooms in Oregon Hall.

new science plant is expected to take the rest of this month. Last week drillers sank shafts in the area to determine soil composition. Engineers will design footing for the foundation of the science building according to the nature of the subsoil.

Lines Removed

Overhead power lines that would distract from the Student Union Building are being removed along University Street between 13th and 18th.

In their place the city is installing underground cables. The new light system will also be set up on 11th Ave. near the University Theater.

A 16-inch water main is nearly ready to be joined to an 8-inch pipe in front of Deady Hall. The new main is coming from the city's water system on Franklin Blvd. to connect with the University's system on the old campus.

Landscaping of about ten acres and the planting of grass will be done this spring and summer. The grounds around all new buildings and the area lying between 11th Ave. and Franklin Blvd near the University Theater will be seeded.

Behind-Scenes Activities Make 'Husband' No Picnic

By NORMAN ANDERSON

One of the sad things about putting on a play is that before it goes before the lights, there must be such things as sets, costumes, props and what have you.

As Bill Schlosser related the other day, "The Warrior's Husband" is no picnic. Impressed with my own story on what all had to be done, I checked the Theater Workshop to see what was going on, or rather up.

Tents Simulated

The first of three sets is in a beginning stage of construction. But it was nothing compared to the tent being constructed. They have to simulate depth, that's look like they have three sides and yet not have three sides.

So all the boards have to be placed at angles that make the unfinished product look like a child's attempt to construct a rectangle—all the sides uneven. But cute little pasteboard cut-outs make the work seem worthwhile. The cut-outs look good anyway.

The construction of the shields is the thing that is novel. Forms have to be made of plaster of Paris. Discarded and broken forms lie conspicuously around the workshop, bearing out Schlosser's statement: "We have to experiment a little first."

Costuming Colorful

A also checked speech graduate, Joan Landman's costume room. Interesting. Being modeled were the Amazon warrior's costumes; skirts about three-quarters of a foot above the knees. I learned sadly that there will be more to the costume than what I saw.

Color will be the keynote of the attire. Glorious blues, reds, yellows, magentas will flash across the stage, draped Greek-fashion around the Amazon women.

The Greek soldiers, too, will get a bit of life with their classy brown dresses (called "tunics") which come just below the knees. They won't be as shapeless as that sounds, though, when they get decked out in armor.

Oregana Orders Due

Living organizations representatives may place orders for the 1950 Oregana this week by sending or bringing $6 to the Oregana office in McArthur Court.
