

Hopes, Memories Told By 'Colonel' Finalists

MAXINE KRISCH

BONNIE BRESSLER

Little Captains Bonnie Bressler and Maxine Krisch are two more finalists hoping to change their title to "Little Colonel" at the Military Ball Saturday night.

Miss Bressler, who is a Chi Omega pledge, now lives at Carson Hall; Miss Krisch is a member of Alpha Phi.

Four other candidates vying for rule of the Scabbard and Blade dance are Margaret Nichols, Judy Baily, Betty Pollock, and Jackie Lewis.

Still faithful to her five-year diary, which is now in its fourth year, Little Colonel aspirant, Maxine Krisch, has a list of other activities that help keep her busy.

When interviewed Monday, she was still a little breathless from a "Comp Conference," the boon of all freshmen writing that "112 term paper."

Maxine isn't new at contests, for she was "May Fete" queen at Grant High in Portland last year, where she was also on the rally squad. At Oregon she has been a member of the Emeraldettes, girls' drill team, and worked on the business side of the Emerald.

Of her accomplishments the blue-eyed finalist pondered, then remembered with a grin—that she played "Home on the Range" on the ukelele after just one five-minute lesson. Swimming, skiing, and dancing are her chief interests in sports.

A native of Nebraska, Maxine called Montana and Washington home before settling in Portland.

"All I can remember about Billings, Mont., she said, are the horses and Indians."

Last summer Maxine worked at the Oregon Caves, doing "just about everything," as she described it.

One job she remembers was handing out boots and striped-coveralls to the ladies going through the wet, drippy caves. Next summer she plans to work in the United States National Bank in Portland.

The five-foot four candidate wants especially to visit Hawaii. "Someday I shall," she promised.

But now she is busy majoring in liberal arts, with the goal of being an elementary teacher or airline hostess.

"The eyes have it"—That's a sure vote when it's Little Captain Bonnie Bressler in question.

Big and brown, with sweeping lashes, her eyes are only one of the highlights of this five-foot two, 105 pound candidate.

Right now Bonnie, a freshman in liberal arts, is anxiously looking forward to spring term—and the picnics and Millrace—canoeing she heard about when she was home in Berkeley, Calif. In fact spring term and winter skiing are two of the main appeals of Oregon, Bonnie believes.

After four years of Spanish in Berkeley High School, Bonnie is now taking Spanish literature and composition. As for a major though, she still isn't sure.

Sun-bathing at Lake Anza or Stinson Beach near San Francisco, coupled with swimming and horseback riding are favorite recreations of this brown-haired finalist.

But the one outstanding episode in her life she confided, was driving to Pullman last October with her two roommates. There they went to the Oregon-WSC game and heard Tex Beneke in Spokane Saturday night.

Another incident she'll never forget was the day she was showered for getting six letters—which is considered more than enough for punishment. Instead though, the whole unit became involved, making a mad melee all over the hall.

As anyone on Carson 4 can tell you, Bonnie is full of fun, and her friendly smile has just a hint of a forthcoming joke behind it.

Eugene Council Refuses Petition Protesting Meters on 11th Street

Petitions signed by 213 University students asking for a reversal of the city council's policy concerning parking meters on East 11th St. was denied at a council meeting last night.

The petition was accepted and filed by the council, but no action was taken.

Bob Kerry, Phi Kappa Psi, who was spokesman representing mill-race fraternities and sororities, summarized the petition, which criticized the action of the council on these bases:

1. The district is primarily residential and not business.
2. It is doubtful that the cost of supervising and installing meters will justify the installation.

Kerry pointed out that each fra-

Junior Week Petitions Due By Saturday

Juniors and other students have this week to petition for chairmanships of Junior Weekend, Oregon largest campus tradition.

Barry Mountain, junior class president, announced this and other Weekend information to representatives from each living organization at a meeting in Fenton Monday.

He explained the duties of the eight main committees. They are the Sunlight Serenade, Promotion, Publicity, Queen contest and coronation, Luncheon, Prom, Floats, and All-Campus Sing.

Co-chairmen will be selected for the Queen and luncheon committees.

Mountain asked each representative to tell petitioners in his or her house to suggest a theme for this year's Junior Weekend on the bottom of the petition. Petitions may be obtained from the office of students affairs.

Petitions may be submitted at a box in the Co-op starting Wednesday morning, or to Mountain at the Alpha Tau Omega house, Anne Case, Pi Beta Phi, or Anne Goodman, Hendricks Hall. Deadline is Saturday noon.

The Weekend, Oregon's 60th, will fall on May 13, 14, and 15.

Faculty Rating Renewal Set For Thursday

Students will rate their instructors in 350 to 400 classes Thursday and Friday under the supervision of honorary members of Mortar Board and other upperclassmen volunteers, chairman Mildred Chetty said Monday.

The rating, sponsored by the AS-UO Executive Council, is being conducted by Mortar Board, senior women's honorary.

Approximately the same procedure which was used last year will be followed in this year's rating, Miss Chetty said. Professors will leave their classes while students are rating them. Rating sheets will be placed in sealed envelopes and not returned to the professor until after final grades are in the registrar's office.

"A high percentage of the faculty members are cooperating in the rating," the chairman stated. Participation is voluntary and the results are used only for the individual professor's benefit.

Letter grades or personal comments are given the instructors on their policies of assignments, organization of subject material, fairness of grading, quality and type of testing, willingness to give individual help, and general effectiveness. Many professors have signified a desire for more personal comments in the optional section, which calls for suggestions for improvement, criticisms of distracting mannerisms and enumeration of the outstanding qualities of the professor, Miss Chetty stated.

The same forms are being used this term as were utilized last year
