Norman Thomas Slated

"like identical glass bottles with different labels—and both empty.

Vigorously anti-Communist today, he appears on various radio forums asserting his political and economic views. Appearing on "Town Hall of the Air" recently, he debated with Raymond Moley, Raymond Swing, and William Chamberlin.

Theomas' appearance is the third in the University Assembly series, sponsored by the assembly committee, headed by Dan E. Clark, history department head.

Thomas' appearance is the third day night. His address in Eugene will follow an appearance at Corvallis this afternoon.

part of the time during most of her nineteen summers. Last summer she worked for Olds and King's college board and was a hostess for the annual University of Oregon picnic, but still managed to make frequent visits to the beach.

This summer she'd like to get some sort of a part-time job which would allow her plenty of spare time to spend—you guessed it—at the beach.

When questioned about the particular attraction of this locality, Judy smiled and replied vaguely, "Oh, swimming and tennis and things."

She was song leader of Kappa Alpha Theta last term, but her new job of assistant social chairman seems more to her liking. She is looking forward to planning desserts, picnics, and other spring term events.

Judy's plans for the future are as yet uncertain.

"Right now my only plans are to graduate."

Phi Thetas to Meet

Phi Theta Upsilon will meet at 12:30 today at the Pi Beta Phi house.

Gold-Plated Typewriter Sparkles

THE GOLD-PLATED CENTER of some attention above, a $150 portable typewriter, will be awarded to some contributor to a fund being raised for the benefit of foreign students. Workers on the drive are, from left, Marian Briner, YWCA; Ben Lyon, Westminster House; Bud Lanser, Alpha Tau Omega; Carol Udy, Alpha Phi; and Wah Chun, YMCA. ## Few Bad Checks Passed To Campus Merchants

By Pete Cornacchia

Suppose something awful should happen and you had to earn your own money.

Would you be able to build up a bank account honestly, or would you write checks without bothering to store up nuts for the winter?

Seems as though most students on the campus go along with the idea that a signature on a check isn't enough in exchange for funds to finance a date or a trip home. Anyone surprised that a single virtue remains alive here will be considered a bit cynical by owners of the various stores and eateries on the campus.

No Bad Checks

At the Side, the owner will tell you that he hasn't had a bad check since he took over the place three years ago. Oh, there's been a "non-sufficient funds" now and then but matters have always been straightened out.

Kieth Fennell has met with comparative success in cashing personals at his two stores, a clothing shop on 13th and a department store (drugstore in the back) on 11th.

"About 99 per cent" of the checks cashed at the two establishments have been good, as has been the case at the Rush Inn.

Del's Inn Too

Del's Inn is another place that hasn't had to finance the work of forgery artists very often.

Last year, Del supplemented his personal check service by setting aside $25, whereby any student could walk in and borrow up to $5 for 5 days by merely signing an IOU, providing there was money in the fund.

The plan didn't survive, mainly because some of the borrowers were a little hazy on just how long a period of five days is.

"Doc" Ireland averages one NSF a week at the Lemon O.

"The kids generally make them good, so I don't regret cashing a small check now and then," he claimed.

Taylor's have come up with a suggestion of building a branch bank near the campus. A growing stack of worthless checks has prompted the proposal.

The University Co-op has cashed $1,670,000 worth of checks this year, according to Manager Gerry Henson.

"Of those," he said, "NSF checks amounted to only $95." A smooth operator took the Co-op for $150 a while back, along with lesser sums from Claypool's drug store and Fennell's.

"Times are getting harder and the number of bad checks is increasing," claimed Sid Claypool. "There will be those who won't want to sweat for their money."

Sid is rightfully cautious. One of the non-sweating type walked into his drug store five years ago and used a gun in taking $211.

Subscribing to this attitude is Aghole Campbell.

"I'll cash their checks if I know 'em," he stated. He hasn't been left holding a great number of rubber checks, but a few months ago a fellow walked into the grocery store and sold him a view or a man with a gun for $70.

No Deliberate Gypping

"The student isn't trying to gyp us," said one. "A week end comes along and he needs $5. He has $1.03 in the bank. He brings in a check for $5, and adjusts the 'error' next week when he has money."

This form of loan business often grows into a considerable nuisance for the man trying to build a deposit for his own checks by selling hamburgers and beer.

No, the kids aren't ruining a good thing, according to the people who know. A pretty fair attitude, coming from the ones being imposed upon.

Maybe the habitual 'borrowers' could write their checks on inner tubes or something, to be set aside by the cashier until redeemed. Or would that be stretching things a little too far?

Student Court Aids In Meter Controversy

As a result of conferences between student court members, University officials, and Eugene City Manager Oren King, parking meters installed on the campus side of Kincaid between 11th and 13th streets will not be used, Court Chairman Dick Neely stated Tuesday night.

The decision came about through an investigation started by the court and continued by Business Manager J. Orville Lindstrom and Physical Plant Superintendent I. I. Wright.

The city council Monday night refused a petition signed by 213 students to reverse the present policy of putting in meters on E. 11th street, restricting parking space in front of Millrace living organizations.

The cases of two faculty members violating University parking restrictions by parking in the area between Deady and Villard Halls were turned over by the court to Director of Information Lyle Nelson for determination.

Five dollars in fines was collected by the court in its regular Tuesday evening session. One student was fined $1 for parking on a lawn and an additional $1 for failing to display his student sticker.

Two students posted bail for illegal parking in the Susan Campbell area and one forfeited bail for parking between Deady and Villard. One case was dismissed.

"The court is working to solve the parking problem at Susan Campbell," Neely stated. "We are attempting to open up another area to parking, subject to the approval of the state fire marshal."

As soon as the Lane County Sheriff deputizes the two managers of Amazon Flats, they will start

Typewriter Winner To Be Told Friday

Announcement of the winner of the foreign students benefit drawing for a gold-plated typewriter will be made during intermission of the Austrian Student Goodwill show at 8 Friday night in the Eugene High School auditorium.

Drawing tickets, priced at 50 cents each, will be on sale in the Co-op and living organizations through Friday.

Concentrated efforts to reach off-campus residents are being made this week by members of the foreign students service committee, University religious organizations, campus YMCA and the YWCA.

All profits from the drawing will go toward paying expenses of foreign students attending the University. This is the first project of the newly-formed foreign students committee.
